INTRODUCTION

2 Plaintiffs oppose Defendants' motion for summary judgment mainly by mischaracterizing 3 the government's standing arguments and asking the Court to ignore the actual merits claims before 4 it in favor of de novo review of the Secretary's policy judgment. As to standing, Plaintiffs suggest 5 that their burden is much lower than it actually is (or, conversely, that the government is suggesting 6 it is much higher), but cannot meet their burden to establish the substantial risk of injury necessary 7 to proceed at this late stage of the litigation. Plaintiffs cannot refute the Census Bureau's well-8 considered position that non-response follow-up operations will address any undercount such that 9 the Bureau will conduct a complete enumeration, instead complaining that the Bureau did not look 10 into the issue further. But it is Plaintiffs' burden, not the Census Bureau's, to demonstrate an injury 11 fairly traceable to a putative differential undercount, and Plaintiffs are left only with wildly speculative 12 confidentiality concerns and their own experts' incomplete analysis of the potential for a differential 13 undercount. At the summary judgment stage, such thin gruel is not sufficient to substantiate 14 standing.

15 On the merits, Plaintiffs' contentions that the enumeration clause will be violated by a 16 differential undercount fails for the same reasons that Plaintiffs cannot establish standing; setting 17 aside that Plaintiffs are wrong on what the Constitution requires, they simply have not met their 18 burden to show a differential undercount will occur given the Bureau's preparations to conduct a 19 complete enumeration. Plaintiffs similarly fail to explain why Defendants are not entitled to summary 20 judgment on claims under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. § 706. In arguing that 21 the Secretary's decision was arbitrary and capricious, Plaintiffs offer up a narrative full of bureaucratic 22 intrigue, but fall short in substantiating these serious charges of misconduct. Instead, Plaintiffs resort 23 to characterizing benign intragovernmental consultation as malfeasance without any tangible 24 evidence. By the same token, Plaintiffs' claims of statutory violations rely mainly on rhetoric rather 25 than any actual legal requirement imposed by Congress. Regardless, Plaintiffs do not even purport 26 to show a dispute of material fact for trial; this claim should be resolved by the Court as a question 27 of law based on the record. Defendants' motion for summary judgment should be granted.

Defendants' Reply in Support of Their Motion for Summary Judgment

ARGUMENTI. Plaintiffs Have Not Demonstrated Standing to Proceed with This Action.

Plaintiffs rebut at length the Defendants' non-existent position that Plaintiffs must establish literal certainty of harm. As Defendants stated in their opposition to Plaintiffs' motion for partial summary judgment, Plaintiffs must show a "substantial risk" of injury. Defs.' Opp'n at 5-7, ECF No. 104. This requirement underpins all of Plaintiffs' theories for standing—they cannot prevail absent such a substantial risk of an injury, even if they have spent money to ward off an ephemeral risk, or if their members are unusually concerned about an insubstantial possibility. Nor, of course, have Plaintiffs identified a single person who does not plan to respond to the 2020 census because of the inclusion of the citizenship question, but who would reverse course if the question were removed.

Plaintiffs claim that they will be injured in three ways—by expenditures on the census, by the effects of an undercount, and by a threatened loss of confidentiality of responses, Pls.' Opp'n at 3-4, ECF No. 103, yet have not presented a substantial risk of any of these.

A. Plaintiffs' Expenditures Are Insufficient to Establish Standing.

First, Plaintiffs refer to the funds spent by San Jose and BAJI to prepare for the census. As further explained in Defendants' opposition, these funds only establish standing if the risk that they address is substantial. Defs.' Opp'n at 4-5. As discussed infra, the risk of harm from an undercount is not sufficient to satisfy standing requirements. And, as further described in Defendants' opposition, neither Plaintiff identifies with specificity outlays that are traceable to the citizenship question, rather than to the outreach they would perform about any decennial census—such as outreach in fact paid for by San Jose prior to the 2010 census. Defs.' Opp'n at 8-9. That Plaintiffs previously did outreach for the 2010 census permits the inference that they generally find such outreach worthwhile, regardless of whether a citizenship question is present. But the reverse is not true. If Plaintiffs show that they plan to spend more money in preparation for the 2020 decennial census, that does not resolve the question of traceability—there could be many reasons for the change, such as increased awareness of the importance of the census. It is Plaintiffs' burden to demonstrate that they

1 have or will spend money traceable to the reinstatement of the citizenship question, and further that 2 these funds are redressable—that if Secretary Ross removed the citizenship question tomorrow they 3 would actually spend less money, even despite the San Jose residents and BAJI members who 4 apparently fear sharing data with the “Trump administration” in light of the “Muslim ban” and other 5 policies.

6 B. Plaintiffs Cannot Show a Substantial Risk of an Undercount or Resulting 7 Harm.

8 Defendants have previously explained that Plaintiffs fail to show that an undercount will 9 occur, or that it would injure them if it did. Defs.’ Opp’n at 5-8. Plaintiffs now attempt to rely on 10 the Census Bureau’s evaluations of past censuses, and its conclusions that hard-to-count populations 11 are hard to count, while simultaneously rejecting the conclusions of Dr. John Abowd, chief scientist 12 of the Census Bureau, that the Bureau is aware of the difficulties in counting such populations, well-13 funded to proceed in 2020, and will successfully enumerate everyone. This is an illogical position.

14 Plaintiffs also attempt to criticize Dr. Abowd’s testimony that “credible quantitative evidence 15 that the addition of the citizenship question would increase the net undercount or increase differential 16 net undercounts for identifiable sub-populations” is lacking, Pls.’ Opp’n at 6—on the grounds that 17 the Census Bureau devoted insufficient resources to looking for such evidence. This reverses the 18 proper burden. Plaintiffs must establish that they have standing, which in this case requires them to 19 put forth such credible evidence of a substantial risk of a net or differential undercount and does not 20 allow them to rely instead on a perceived lack of effort by an opposing party. Plaintiffs also claim 21 that they have established a substantial risk of an undercount based on Dr. Abowd’s statement that 22 the reinstatement of a citizenship question “could drive the net undercounts way up or they could 23 drive them way down.” Pls.’ Opp’n at 6. Dr. Abowd is simply stating that, in the absence of credible 24 evidence, many possibilities are open but there are no certainties. Plaintiffs must do more than show 25 that an undercount is possible in the sense that it is possible undersigned counsel will win a gold medal 26 at the 2020 Olympics; they must show that an undercount—and resulting harm to their budgets or 27 apportionment—is at a substantial risk of occurring.

1 C. Plaintiffs’ Alleged Injuries from Fear of Loss of Confidentiality Are Rank
 2 Speculation.

3 Plaintiffs also claim standing based on BAJI members’ sense of “fear and intimidation” based 4 on concerns that their census responses will not be kept confidential. As with Plaintiffs’ fears of loss 5 of funding, Plaintiffs must demonstrate a substantial risk that BAJI members’ confidentiality or 6 privacy is actually in danger—speculative worry does not satisfy Article III. Clapper v. Amnesty Int’l, 7 USA, 133 S. Ct. 1138, 1151 (2013). Plaintiffs do not dispute that, by law, census responses must be 8 kept confidential. See, e.g., 13 U.S.C. § 9. Plaintiffs cannot point to a single piece of evidence 9 indicating that the Census Bureau will alter its longstanding and deeply held commitment to 10 preserving the confidentiality of census responses, or make any other change that would lead to the 11 disclosure of census responses. Plaintiffs’ only attempt at making such a showing is based on 12 unfounded speculation that DOJ will change its position, set forth in a 2010 memoranda, that census 13 data remain confidential in light of the PATRIOT Act. Pls.’ Opp’n at 7. Plaintiffs cite an email sent 14 to Acting Assistant Attorney General (AAG) John Gore concerning draft responses to questions
 15 from Congress. Pls.’ Opp’n at 7-8. The email advised AAG Gore that it was better not to issue too 16 broad of a response “in case the issues addressed in the OLC opinion or related issues come up later 17 for renewed debate.” Pls.’ Opp’n at 8 (quoting Case Decl., Ex. B at 3). This anodyne piece of public 18 relations advice—where possible, avoid taking a position—is completely unremarkable, and, at most, 19 indicates that the author of the email thought it was theoretically possible that DOJ’s position could 20 one day be debated (as, indeed, is true for virtually every DOJ position). Plaintiffs offer no evidence 21 that AAG Gore, or any decisionmaker in DOJ, shared that view—or that the Census Bureau, or indeed, 22 Congress, would reverse the well-established policies that protect respondents’ confidentiality.

23 Indeed, at his deposition, AAG Gore was asked about this specific email. He testified that 24 “to the extent [Plaintiffs’ counsel is] suggesting that [the author of the email] said anything about what 25 this administration would do, that’s flatly inconsistent with the actual words on the page.” Gore Tr.
 26 309:18-21, Federighi Decl., Ex. A. He further testified that he was not aware of any ongoing 27 deliberations about whether to revisit the position in DOJ’s memo. Gore Tr. 311:8-17. Although

1 Plaintiffs have presumably identified what they felt was the most concerning sentence in the 120,000
 2 pages of DOJ documents that they received, they completely fail to present any evidence of a risk to 3 the confidentiality of census responses, much less a substantial risk, and therefore lack standing on 4 that ground.

5 D. No Genuine Issues of Material Fact Concerning Standing.

6 Plaintiffs also claim that, failing everything else, a genuine issue of material fact exists as to 7 their standing. Pls.' Opp'n at 8-9. Plaintiffs appear to confuse uncertainty with a dispute of material
 8 fact. The mere fact that Dr. Abowd testified that he expected a complete enumeration in the 2020 9 census, but that it was within the realm of possibility that an undercount could occur, does not create 10 a disputed fact. Rather it creates a somewhat uncertain fact, and it certainly does not establish a 11 substantial risk of an undercount. Plaintiffs' contention to the contrary that any dispute over "whether 12 an undercount 'will' happen itself shows that there is no dispute that there is a 'substantial risk' that it 13 will happen," Pls.' Opp'n at 8 n.8, verges on nonsense.

14 Plaintiffs once again cherry-pick the Census Bureau's analysis, accepting the agency's 15 calculations of past undercounts and attempting to parlay those into predictions about the future, 16 despite the contrary opinion of Dr. Abowd. Indeed, there is no reason to assume that the Census 17 Bureau's performance in 2020 will be the same as in 2010, given that it has spent the past ten years 18 improving its systems as a result of lessons learned in 2010.

19 Finally, Plaintiffs seek to rely on the expert declarations of Drs. Barreto and 20 O'Muirheartaigh.¹ Dr. Barreto conducted a survey to attempt to gauge the impact of the citizenship 21 question on response rates to the 2020 census. Barreto Decl. ¶¶ 62-78, Pls.' Opp'n, Ex. 1, ECF No.
 22 103-3. This survey, however, failed to sufficiently address the ultimate enumeration, after households 23 are encouraged to respond; NRFU, including review of administrative records and proxies; and 24 imputation. Although at the end of the survey Dr. Barreto asked respondents in the same survey if 25 additional contact would change their mind, Barreto Decl. ¶ 81, but this ignores the effects of

26
 27 ¹ Defendants address these arguments here, rather than with the Enumeration Clause arguments, as Plaintiffs' standing to proceed is jurisdictional.

1 administrative records proxy data, and imputation; and is an unsatisfactory measure of response to in-2 person contact with an enumerator because “asking someone about their intention to do something 3 and actually measuring what they do in a field experiment is very different.” Abowd Tr. 1162:13 – 4 1163:3, Federighi Decl., Ex. B. As to the Census Bureau’s extensive efforts to enumerate those who 5 do not initially respond, both Drs. Barreto and O’Muirheartaigh make highly general statements, 6 essentially conveying that hard-to-count populations are, in fact, hard to count, but neither predicts
 7 with specificity what NRFU success-rate they would therefore expect for the households that Dr.
 8 Barreto believes will choose not to self-respond due to a citizenship question.

9 Crucially, even if the Court were to assume that Dr. Barreto’s estimated undercount is correct, 10 Plaintiffs identify no admissible evidence indicating that they will actually be harmed (for example, 11 evidence that residents of San Jose or BAJI members will lose congressional representation). To the 12 contrary, Defendants’ expert, Dr. Gurrea, began his analysis with the estimated undercounts generated 13 from Dr. Barreto’s survey (however unsubstantiated), and assuming historical success rates for NRFU, 14 Dr. Gurrea concluded that “congressional apportionment in any state (including California) does not 15 change due to reinstatement of a citizenship question.” Gurrea Decl. ¶¶ 11, 14, 66-70, Defs.’ MSJ, 16 Ex. B, ECF No. 100-2. Using a similar method, Dr. Gurrea concluded that any effects on funding 17 from Dr. Barreto’s predicted undercount would likely be very small. Gurrea Decl. ¶ 11. Although 18 Plaintiffs apparently disagree, their failure to come forward with reliable evidence, as opposed to mere 19 supposition, falls short of establishing a genuine dispute of material fact relating to their injuries from 20 the reinstatement of a citizenship question.

21 II. Summary Judgment Is Appropriate For Defendants on Plaintiffs’ Enumeration
 22 Clause Claim.

23 As this Court explained at the motion-to-dismiss phase, the Enumeration Clause issue 24 presented “a close question” and “[w]hether plaintiffs can ultimately sustain this showing on the merits 25 remains to be seen.” Order Denying MTDs at 28-29, ECF No. 86. At summary judgment, Plaintiffs 26 must accordingly meet a higher burden, which they have failed to do.

27 As this Court has noted, “demographic questions have long been a part of the enumeration

1 process since its inception” and Plaintiffs are therefore, necessarily “not taking the position that every 2 single past census that included a citizenship question was constitutionally defective.” Id. at 26-27.
3 Instead, Plaintiffs must show, using admissible evidence, that the citizenship question “is so uniquely 4 impactful on the process of counting itself, that it becomes akin to a mechanics-of-counting-type 5 challenge.” Id. at 28 (emphasis added). For the same reasons that Plaintiffs cannot show a substantial 6 likelihood of an undercount or of any harm, as discussed supra at Part I.B, Plaintiffs have not shown 7 a genuine dispute of material fact regarding the likelihood of a total failure of enumeration sufficient 8 to violate the Enumeration Clause.

9 III. The Secretary’s Decision Was Not Arbitrary and Capricious.

10 The Secretary’s decision was not arbitrary and capricious because he set out to understand 11 the costs and benefits of reinstating a citizenship question before making his decision and explained 12 his reasoning based on the record before him. In opposing Defendants’ motion for summary 13 judgment on Plaintiffs’ arbitrary-and-capricious claim, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants’ motion 14 should be denied as “boilerplate statements regarding the deference to agency decision-making in 15 ordinary APA cases.” Pls.’ Opp’n at 11. But Plaintiffs’ disregard for the fundamental standards that 16 undergird judicial review of agency action is no basis to deny Defendants’ motion. Plaintiffs contend 17 that Defendants acted egregiously and unlawfully and thus reason that their case “is no ordinary APA 18 case,” such that the ordinary rules of deference should not apply. See id. Yet every plaintiff in an 19 APA case believes the government has acted unlawfully, often egregiously, and Plaintiffs’ particular 20 objections to the action under review in this case do not entitle them to de novo review of the 21 Secretary’s judgment. Plaintiffs cannot contest that the only question before the Court in an arbitrary-22 and-capricious claim is whether the agency’s decision “was the product of reasoned decisionmaking.”
23 Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n of U.S., Inc. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (“State Farm”), 463 U.S. 29, 52
24 (1983). And Plaintiffs’ arguments on this point fail.

25 Importantly, Plaintiffs nowhere claim that there are disputes of material fact as to the 26 arbitrary-and-capricious claim that require judicial fact finding after trial. Plaintiffs assert in 27 conclusory fashion that “the evidence precludes summary adjudication of the APA claim in

1 Defendants’ favor,” Pls.’ Opp’n at 12, and to that end, Plaintiffs suggest that the Court must consider 2 extra-record evidence in denying Defendants’ motion. (It should not, as explained infra.) But 3 Plaintiffs nowhere explain why this claim ought to go to trial. That should come as no surprise, as 4 APA claims are decided on the record before the agency, 5 U.S.C. § 706, and the very notion of 5 judicial fact finding in an APA case—much less a trial—is a significant departure. See, e.g., Herguan
 6 Univ. v. ICE, 258 F. Supp. 3d 1050, 1063 (N.D. Cal. 2017) (“[W]hen a party seeks review of agency
 7 action under the APA, the district judge sits as an appellate tribunal.” (quoting Rempfer v. Sharfstein, 8 583 F.3d 860, 865 (D.C. Cir. 2009))). Proceeding to trial on this arbitrary-and-capricious claim would 9 be unusual in the extreme,² and this Court should resolve the APA claims at summary judgment.

10 A. Plaintiffs Fail to Establish that the Court Should Rely on Extra-Record
 11 Discovery to Address Plaintiffs’ APA Claim.

12 At the outset, Plaintiffs ask this Court to set aside the basic principles of administrative-record 13 review that form the bedrock of any APA claim and instead engage in a plenary evaluation of all 14 extra-record materials obtained through discovery. Despite moving for partial summary judgment 15 based on the administrative record, Plaintiffs’ opposition to Defendants’ motion is rooted mainly in 16 materials obtained through extra-record discovery. Plaintiffs are too impatient to air their grievances 17 about a policy decision they oppose to pause and consider the Supreme Court’s exhortation that “the 18 focal point for judicial review should be the administrative record already in existence, not some new 19 record made initially in the reviewing court.” Camp v. Pitts, 411 U.S. 138, 142 (1973) (per curiam); see 20 also, e.g. Fla. Light & Power Co v. Lorion, 470 U.S. 729, 743 (1985).

21 Instead, Plaintiffs’ argument seems to be that because the Court authorized limited extra-22 record discovery, the Court also must ignore limits on APA review and interrogate the substance of 23 the Secretary’s policy decision. But this Court has not so held. In authorizing extra-record discovery, 24 the Court did not resolve the question of what materials would be subject to the Court’s review in 25

26 ² Although the New York challenges to the reinstatement of a citizenship question proceeded 27 to trial, Defendants respectfully submit that those cases could and should have been resolved on cross-motions for summary judgment.

1 resolving the APA claim, nor did the Court suggest that this discovery order invited de novo review of 2 the Secretary's judgment. Setting aside whether the Court's order authorizing extra-record discovery
3 was correct in the first place, a question on which the Supreme Court has granted Defendants'
4 petition for a writ of certiorari in the related New York challenges to the Secretary's decision, a bad-5 faith finding in authorizing discovery does not overcome the clear rule that this Court "cannot 6 substitute its judgment for that of the agency." Ctr. for Bio. Diversity v. Zinke, 868 F.3d 1054, 1057 (9th 7 Cir. 2017).

8 The Ninth Circuit has made this point clear. In Lands Council v. Powell, 395 F.3d 1019 (9th 9 Cir. 2005), the court emphasized that in "limited circumstances, district courts are permitted to admit 10 extra-record evidence" for four enumerated purposes, including a showing of bad faith, but "[t]he 11 scope of these exceptions permitted by [Ninth Circuit] precedent is constrained, so that the exception 12 does not undermine the general rule." Id. at 1029-30 (quoting Sw. Ctr. for Bio. Diversity v. Forest Serv., 13 100 F.3d 1443, 1450 (9th Cir. 1996)). Indeed, "[w]ere the federal courts routinely or liberally to admit 14 new evidence when reviewing agency decisions, it would be obvious that the federal courts would be 15 proceeding, in effect, de novo rather than with the proper deference to agency processes, expertise, 16 and decision-making." Id. Thus, "[t]hese limited exceptions operate to identify and plug holes in the 17 administrative record." Id. (emphasis added). And these "exceptions to the normal rule regarding 18 consideration of extra-record materials 'only appl[y] to information available at the time, not post-19 decisional information.'" Tri-Valley CAREs v. Dep't of Energy, 671 F.3d 1113, 1130-31 (9th Cir. 2012).
20 Thus, the Court should consider contemporaneous extra-record materials obtained through 21 discovery only as necessary to plug any holes in the administrative record.

22 B. The Secretary's Decision Was Neither Pretextual Nor Unreasonable.

23 Plaintiffs argue the Secretary's decisionmaking process was both unreasonable and pretextual 24 but fail to substantiate their claims, even when relying on extra-record discovery. Pls.' Opp'n at 13-25 19. In making this argument, Plaintiffs seem to agree, as they must, that courts uphold an agency's 26 decision "when the agency's explanation is clear enough that its 'path may reasonably be discerned.'" Encino Motorcars, LLC v. Navarro, 136 S. Ct. 2117, 2125 (2016) (quoting Bowman Transp., Inc. v. Arke-

1 Best Freight Sys, Inc., 419 U.S. 281, 286 (1974)). But instead of grappling with the standard, Plaintiffs 2 drape allegations of misconduct over the decisionmaking process in an effort to persuade the Court
3 to set aside the Secretary’s decision in an area where he has virtually unlimited discretion. In so doing, 4 Plaintiffs ignore that courts are obliged to “presum[e] the agency action to be valid and affirm[] the 5 agency action if a reasonable basis exists for its decision.” Pacific Dawn LLC v. Pritzker, 831 F.3d 6 1166, 1173 (9th Cir. 2016). Absent evidence of the misconduct they seek to conjure, describing 7 normal agency processes as “secret[] demand[s]” and “back-door justification[s]” is insufficient basis 8 to set aside agency action. Pls.’ Opp’n at 13-14.

9 1. The Secretary came into office prepared to consider various census 10 issues and appropriately consulted with DOJ.

11 Plaintiffs begin by arguing that the Secretary’s consideration of whether to reinstate a 12 citizenship question prior to receipt of the DOJ letter renders any subsequent analysis arbitrary and 13 capricious. Pls.’ Opp’n at 14-15. This argument focuses on two points: that the Secretary considered 14 the issue early on his tenure at the Commerce Department and that one of the Secretary’s advisors
15 communicated with the Justice Department to inquire whether it would be interested in the inclusion 16 of a question. See id. Separately, Plaintiffs also object to the involvement of the Attorney General in 17 a decision of importance to his Department—the request to include a citizenship question on the 18 census. Id. at 16. None of these points is evidence of arbitrary or capricious decisionmaking.

19 As an initial matter, the fact that the Secretary considered the issue before DOJ sent its request 20 is unremarkable. Soon after the Secretary was confirmed, he “began considering various fundamental 21 issues” regarding the 2020 Census, “including funding and content,” as well as schedule, contracting 22 issues, systems readiness, and the upcoming 2018 End-to-End Test. AR 1321; see also AR 317-322, 23 1416-1470. These issues examined by the Secretary early in his tenure “included whether to reinstate 24 a citizenship question,” which he and his staff “thought . . . could be warranted.” AR 1321. The 25 Secretary questioned why a citizenship question was not on the census questionnaire and sought other 26 general background “factual information.” AR 2521-2522, 12465, 12541-12543; see also AR 3699. As 27 Justice Gorsuch has explained, “there’s nothing unusual about a new cabinet secretary coming to

1 office inclined to favor a different policy direction,” In re Dep’t of Commerce, __ S. Ct. __, 2018 WL
2 5259090, at *1 (Oct. 22, 2018) (opinion of Gorsuch, J.), and the Secretary’s exploration of those issues
3 with his staff prior to contacting other agencies to determine whether they might support the question 4 shows preparation, not misconduct. Plaintiffs’ expectations for the policymaking process do not seem 5 to be rooted in the actual reality of governance.

6 Plaintiffs also make the unsupported assertion that the Secretary and other government 7 officials sought to reinstate a citizenship question on the decennial census “so that non-citizens could 8 be excluded from congressional apportionment.” Pls.’ Opp’n at 14. But the evidence Plaintiffs cite 9 does not substantiate their claim. First, Plaintiffs argue that policy advisor Earl Comstock “wrote 10 Ross emails regarding how non-citizens are treated for apportionment,” citing two emails in the 11 administrative record. Pls.’ Opp’n at 14. The first is an email from Comstock to a Justice Department 12 official explaining that Comstock was the contact for Commerce issues; there is no mention of the 13 census, much less apportionment. AR 2462. The second document is an email from Comstock to 14 the Secretary that simply addresses the question whether undocumented aliens are counted for 15 apportionment purposes, referencing standard Census Bureau materials. AR 2521. Neither email 16 contains evidence of an intent to reinstate the question to affect apportionment.

17 Plaintiffs also point to an email from advisor David Langdon explaining that undocumented 18 aliens have long been counted. AR 12465. And Plaintiffs point out that counsel at the Commerce 19 Department were analyzing questions related to how questions of citizenship are related to 20 apportionment, including the unremarkable conclusion that the Commerce Department has no 21 authority over deciding how any data about the population, including citizenship data, is used for 22 apportionment—only conducting the actual enumeration. Pls.’ Opp’n at 15. These emails illustrate 23 that a new Commerce Secretary endeavored to educate himself about how the Census Bureau 24 conducts an actual enumeration and what the reinstatement of a citizenship question might entail.
25 The information Plaintiffs cite reinforces the conclusion that the Secretary and his advisors simply 26 sought to understand these issues; after extensive discovery, Plaintiffs adduced no evidence to 27 support the claim that the Secretary sought to include a citizenship question on the decennial census

1 to affect apportionment. Plaintiffs somehow leap from these innocuous emails to allegations of 2 misconduct, but the Court should reject Plaintiffs' insinuations as a cynical effort to characterize their 3 insubstantial evidence.

4 Next, Plaintiffs cite contacts with White House official Steve Bannon and Kansas Secretary
5 of State Kris Kobach. Pls.' Opp'n at 14-15. Plaintiffs ask the Court to impute these officials' putative 6 motives to the Secretary based only on the fact of their communications. Suffice it to say that 7 policymakers can (and should) speak with stakeholders with a wide variety of opinions, and it would 8 be nonsensical to impute all of those opinions to the agency decisionmaker simply because he or she 9 heard them. And here, Plaintiffs would have the Court jump to this conclusion on little more than 10 Plaintiffs' suggestion that it must be so. To the contrary, as Defendants have noted elsewhere, the 11 Secretary rejected Mr. Kobach's proposed question, which focused on legal status, AR 763-764, and 12 adopted the question used in the American Community Survey (ACS).

13 Lastly, Plaintiffs suggest that the DOJ letter should be disregarded as a sham because 14 Commerce Department officials were in contact with DOJ to discuss the issues before DOJ sent its 15 letter and because the Attorney General was involved in DOJ's decisionmaking. Pls.' Opp'n at 15-16 16. Notably, Plaintiffs rely exclusively on characterizations of deposition testimony rather than any 17 evidence in the actual administrative record, but regardless, the back-and-forth between the agencies
18 prior to DOJ's decision to send the letter evidences an effort on the part of the Commerce 19 Department to be sure that a citizenship question would actually yield data helpful to the government.
20 As the Secretary explained, the Commerce Department sought only to understand "whether the 21 Department of Justice (DOJ) would support, and if so would request, inclusion of a citizenship 22 question as consistent with and useful for enforcement of the Voting Rights Act." AR 1321. After 23 all, DOJ previously had requested that the ACS include a citizenship question for the purposes of 24 carrying out its enforcement responsibilities under the Voting Rights Act. AR 278-283, 9203-9216.

25 The fact that the Commerce Department and DOJ continued those discussions with respect 26 to including a citizenship question on the decennial census, including through conversations between 27 the Secretary and the Attorney General, should be unsurprising. Plaintiffs find it alarming that the

1 Attorney General would be involved in an issue involving the questions to be included on the 2 decennial census. See Pls.’ Opp’n at 16. But surely, that officials at the highest levels of both the 3 Commerce Department and DOJ sought to be fully informed and involved in this decision is 4 evidence of a fulsome consideration. Plaintiffs cite a “remarkable role played by political appointees” 5 but never pause to explain why it is problematic for the leadership of a government agency to be 6 immersed in decisionmaking. See id. Plaintiffs’ fixation on this point belies their actual purpose in 7 making this argument; they disagree with the Secretary and the former Attorney General and thus 8 consider their discussions on this issue to be illegal. In Plaintiffs’ view, it seems, political appointees
9 should not have a role in decisionmaking on significant issues. The Court should reject an argument 10 that yields the curious suggestion that high-level agency officials should not consult before issuing 11 formal requests of each other, particularly on an issue as significant as the decennial census.

12 2. *The Secretary reasonably accepted the rationale set forth in the Justice 13 Department’s letter for requesting a citizenship question.

14 Plaintiffs also argue that the DOJ letter must be pretextual, and that the Secretary acted 15 arbitrarily and capriciously in relying on it, because they disagree with DOJ’s request for block-level 16 citizenship data. Pls.’ Opp’n at 16-17. As an initial matter, the Secretary reasonably relied on DOJ’s
17 letter explaining their request for inclusion of a citizenship question on the census to aid in DOJ’s 18 efforts to enforce the VRA. As explained in Defendants’ opposition to Plaintiffs’ motion for 19 summary judgement at 27-29, DOJ’s process in issuing the Gary Letter is not under review in this 20 lawsuit, and Plaintiffs cannot rely on putative flaws in DOJ’s reasoning in the Gary Letter to impeach 21 Commerce’s decisionmaking process. For present purposes, “the critical question is whether the 22 action agency’s reliance was arbitrary and capricious.” City of Tacoma v. FERC, 460 F.3d 53, 75 (D.C.
23 Cir. 2006). And here, Plaintiffs have not shown that the Secretary was unreasonable in choosing not 24 to second-guess DOJ about what would be helpful to DOJ’s efforts to enforce the VRA.

25 Plaintiffs instead continue in their effort to refute DOJ’s (non-existent) position concerning 26 the necessity of a citizenship question on the census. DOJ’s position has never been that CVAP data 27 from the decennial census (rather than the ACS or another source) is “necessary” to enforce Section

1 2 of the Voting Rights Act. Instead, as the Gary Letter stated, in order to enforce Section 2 of the 2 VRA, DOJ “needs a reliable calculation of the citizen voting-age population” and that that data was 3 “critical.” AR 663. In order to obtain this data, the Gary Letter stated that “the decennial census 4 questionnaire is the most appropriate vehicle.” AR 663. Remarkably, Plaintiffs read something 5 sinister into AAG Gore’s mere confirmation of what the Gary Letter says. Gore Tr. 299:8-14 (“Q.
6 Okay. So is it correct, as this comment notes, that the December 12 letter requesting a citizenship 7 question be added to the census did not say that it was necessary to collect CVAP data through the 8 census questionnaire for VRA enforcement? A. That is correct.”). Plaintiffs also misstate AAG 9 Gore’s testimony when they claim that he “testified that DOJ had never declined to bring a VRA 10 claim because it relied on statistical estimates.” Pls.’ Opp’n at 16. In fact, AAG Gore testified to the 11 opposite—that he was not aware of a case when a plaintiff other than DOJ had declined to bring a case 12 for such a reason. Gore Tr. 204:3-15.

13 Plaintiffs also rely on the expert opinions of Dr. Lisa Handley and Professor Pamela Karlan 14 to illustrate their view that DOJ’s stated reasons for seeking citizenship data were pretextual. But 15 these opinions are far afield of any evidence properly subject to review in an APA claim. Indeed, 16 Plaintiffs introduce this evidence in a transparent effort to contradict the judgment of both DOJ and 17 the Secretary—inviting this Court to substitute its own judgment for the Secretary’s—rather than any 18 proper purpose tethered to an exception to administrative-record review. Even where extra-record 19 evidence may be admitted, “reviewing courts may not look to this evidence as a basis for questioning 20 the agency’s scientific analyses or conclusions.” San Luis & Delta-Mendota Water Auth. v. Locke, 776 21 F.3d 971, 993 (9th Cir. 2014). Indeed, the Ninth Circuit has emphasized that a district court which 22 might otherwise properly admit evidence “may not use the admitted extra-record evidence ‘to determine 23 the correctness or wisdom of the agency’s decision.’” Id. (quoting Asarco, Inc. v. EPA, 616 F.2d 1153, 24 1160 (9th Cir. 1980)). “Such use is never permitted,” as it “overstep[s] the bounds of [these 25 exceptions] by opening the administrative record as a forum for the experts to debate the merits.” 26 Id. Yet that is precisely what Plaintiffs seek to do with the expert opinions of Dr. Handley and 27 Professor Karlan—open up the record as a forum for experts to debate the merits of the Gary Letter.

28 City of San Jose v. Ross*, No. 3:18-cv-2279-RS
Defendants’ Reply in Support of Their Motion for Summary Judgment

1 3. *The Secretary was not required to share every facet of his consultation 2 process when discussing the issues with relevant stakeholders.

3 Lastly, Plaintiffs briefly suggest that the Secretary acted unlawfully by “hid[ing] the fact” that 4 the Commerce Department was “behind the DOJ Request.” Pls.’ Opp’n at 18. Here, Plaintiffs again 5 seek to characterize the conduct of government officials as nefarious and furtive, part of a vast web 6 of deception, when the evidence is amenable to a simpler explanation. In fact, all that Plaintiffs have 7 pointed out is that agency officials considered the question whether to reinstate a citizenship question, 8 inquired “whether the Department of Justice (DOJ) would support, and if so would request, inclusion 9 of a citizenship question as consistent with and useful for enforcement of the Voting Rights Act,” 10 AR 1321, and then proceeded with an appropriate examination of the DOJ request upon its receipt.
 11 And this information was publicly disclosed by Defendants as part of the administrative record. AR 12 1321. Moreover, Plaintiffs mischaracterize public statements about the agency’s process that focused 13 on the analysis of the DOJ request and did not, reasonably enough, purport to recount a total history 14 of every discussion of a citizenship question at the Commerce Department. See Pls.’ Opp’n at 18-19.
 15 And to the extent Plaintiffs seem to suggest that the Commerce Department misled the Census 16 Bureau, there is no suggestion in any of the cited testimony that the Census Bureau was not aware of 17 all of the facts necessary to conduct its analysis, nor is there anything improper about the Secretary 18 declining to disclose the entire history of his conversations at every step of the consultation process
 19 with every member of the Department’s staff. See id. Plaintiffs see a conspiracy, but all the record 20 shows is a back-and-forth consultative process.

21 C. The Secretary Adequately Considered the Issue of Testing.

22 Lastly, Plaintiffs argue that the Secretary unlawfully departed from past practice by 23 “[e]liminating the testing protocol” for new questions. Pls.’ Opp’n at 19-24. This argument is rooted 24 in misunderstandings both of the Secretary’s analysis and of the Census Bureau’s view as to whether 25 the reinstatement of a citizenship question necessitated further testing before inclusion in the 26 decennial census. The Secretary’s analysis was based on the record before him, and the Census 27 Bureau explained to the Secretary that, “[s]ince the question is already asked on the American

1 Community Survey, [it] would accept the cognitive research and questionnaire testing from the ACS
2 instead of independently retesting the citizenship question.” AR 1279. The Bureau further explained 3 that “the citizenship question has already undergone the cognitive research and questionnaire testing 4 required for new questions.” AR 1319. In any event, “no new questions ha[d] been added to the 5 Decennial Census (for nearly 20 years)” and the Bureau accordingly “did not fee[l] bound by past 6 precedent.” AR 1296. Plaintiffs do not explain why that should not be enough for the Secretary; he 7 inquired with the relevant officials, who made clear to the Secretary that the proposed citizenship 8 question had been adequately tested through its regular inclusion in the ACS. AR 1279, 1319.

9 Plaintiffs nowhere demonstrate that the Secretary’s decisionmaking process was arbitrary and 10 capricious under these circumstances. Plaintiffs point out that previous questions relating to 11 citizenship were in different contexts or had different wording. Pls.’ Opp’n at 20-21. But 12 “[p]retesting is not required for questions that performed adequately in another survey.” U.S. Census 13 Bureau, Statistical Quality Standards at 8 (July 2013), [https://www.census.gov/content/dam/
14 Census/about/about-the-bureau/policies_and_notices/quality/statistical-quality-standards/15 Quality_Standards.pdf](https://www.census.gov/content/dam/Census/about/about-the-bureau/policies_and_notices/quality/statistical-quality-standards/Quality_Standards.pdf). And in any event, here Plaintiffs simply seek to substitute their judgment for 16 that of the Census Bureau, on which the Secretary reasonably relied (and on which Plaintiffs rely in 17 making other arguments). By the same token, Plaintiffs’ arguments about testing protocols and 18 procedure are rooted in expert opinions from a former Census Bureau official who believes additional 19 testing was required. But again, the Court “may not look to this evidence as a basis for questioning 20 the agency’s scientific analyses or conclusions.” San Luis & Delta-Mendota Water Auth., 776 F.3d at 21 993. Plaintiffs’ efforts to second-guess the agency’s decisionmaking process in hindsight, by relying 22 on other experts’ views or other post hoc considerations, simply is not permissible under the APA, as 23 it “inevitably leads the reviewing court to substitute its judgment for that of the agency.” *Ctr. for Bio.
24 Diversity v. Fish & Wildlife Serv.*, 450 F.3d 930, 943 (9th Cir. 2006). The Court’s review is limited to 25 determining whether the agency articulated a rational explanation for its decision based on the facts 26 before it, and here the Secretary did so.

1 Plaintiffs make one last point. They take issue with the editing of a Census Bureau document
2 responding to questions from the Secretary, which included a question about the process for adding 3 new questions to the census. AR 1296, 13023. Plaintiffs do not suggest this response was inaccurate
4 such that the Secretary did not have before him the appropriate information, and senior Census 5 Bureau officials signed off on the position as articulated. AR 13023. Plaintiffs place significant 6 importance on the final version of the document, which states:

7 Because no new questions have been added to the Decennial Census (for 8 nearly 20 years), the Census Bureau did not feel bound by past precedent when 9 considering the Department of Justice's request. Rather, the Census Bureau is working 10 with all relevant stakeholders to ensure that legal and regulatory requirements are filled 11 and that questions will produce quality, useful information for the nation. As you are 12 aware, that process is ongoing at your direction.

13 AR 1296. Yet Plaintiffs point to nothing in this statement that is inaccurate, for all their efforts to 14 do so through depositions of government officials. The Secretary relied on accurate information 15 provided to him, ultimately from the Census Bureau, and regardless of what Plaintiffs' experts would 16 have done in the same situation, the APA does not contemplate plaintiffs eliciting testimony from 17 shadow officials to substitute their judgment for that of the officials who actually hold those 18 positions.

19 IV. The Secretary's Decision Was Not in Excess of Statutory Jurisdiction or Otherwise 20 Unlawful.

21 Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion, and as set forth in Defendants' opposition at 16-17, 22 Secretary Ross did act in accordance with 13 U.S.C. § 141(f)(3) in reporting the topics and questions
23 for the 2020 decennial census to Congress. In addition, and as set forth in Defendants' opposition 24 at 14-15, Secretary Ross's compliance with the congressional reporting requirements of § 141(f) is 25 not subject to judicial review because there is no final agency action and any injury is unredressable.
26 Finally, if a problem did exist, the Secretary could submit a specifically-labelled § 141(f)(3) report at 27 any time prior to the 2020 decennial census.

1 Plaintiffs conflate the question of whether the Secretary’s decision to reinstate a citizenship
2 question is subject to judicial review with the question of whether the Secretary complied with a 3 congressional reporting requirement. Although Defendants respectfully disagree with this Court’s 4 resolution of their motion to dismiss, they now defend the Secretary’s decision on the merits, see infra
5 Part III. The requirement that Secretary Ross report to Congress the topics and subjects, however, 6 does not constitute a final agency action and is not redressable.

7 Plaintiffs first claim that the purported failure to report to Congress renders the Secretary’s 8 decision to reinstate a citizenship question unlawful. Pls.’ Opp’n at 28-29. Plaintiffs offer no 9 evidence that § 141(f) is a substantive limit on the Secretary’s power. To the contrary, the best 10 interpretation is that § 141(f) is a ministerial requirement in light of the broad authority that Congress 11 has delegated to the Secretary to set the form of the decennial census. See Wisconsin v. City of New 12 York, 517 U.S. 1, 19 (1996) (holding that Congress “has delegated its broad authority over the census 13 to the Secretary” (citing 13 U.S.C. § 141(a))). There is no reason that Congress would need to put in 14 place an additional substantive limitation, as it is perfectly capable of intervening, if, based on the 15 Secretary’s reports, it finds it appropriate to do so.

16 Second, Plaintiffs suggest that “The Reports Themselves May Be Challenged as Final Agency 17 Action.” Pls.’ Opp’n at 29. Their complaint, however, does not actually raise a challenge to the 18 reports, nor have they sought leave to amend their complaint. See Compl. ¶¶ 7-8 (defining the 19 Secretary’s action as the March 26, 2018 decision memo, not the report to Congress). Furthermore, 20 the authority offered by Plaintiffs is unavailing and inapposite because it does not contain examples 21 of judicial review of reports to Congress. In Natural Resources Defense Council v. National Highway Traffic
22 Safety Admin., 894 F.3d 95 (2d Cir. 2018), the court found that the agency had acted ultra vires—not 23 because of a congressional reporting requirement—but because it enacted a rule which vitiated the 24 effect of a congressional statute. See also Motion Picture Ass’n of Am., Inc. v. FCC, 309 F.3d 796 (D.C.
25 Cir. 2002) (striking down an agency’s attempt to issue a rule because Congress had only authorized 26 the agency to submit a report to Congress); Tutein v. Daley, 43 F. Supp. 2d 113, 114 (D. Mass. 1999) 27 (discussing a substantive report to Congress pursuant to 16 U.S.C. § 1854, which triggered a

1 requirement for the creation of a fishery management plan within one year based on the report, and 2 not reaching claims about the report in the opinion cited by Plaintiffs, because of ripeness concerns), 3 Am. Fed'n of Gov't Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3669 v. Shinseki, 821 F. Supp. 2d 337 (D.D.C. 2011), 4 aff'd, 709 F.3d 29 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (analyzing a decision paper with no relationship to any 5 congressional report); Doe v. Tenenbaum, 127 F. Supp. 3d 426, 433 (D. Md. 2012) (addressing public
6 safety reports, not reports to Congress); Farrell v. Tillerson, 315 F. Supp. 3d 47, 59 (D.D.C. 2018)
7 (analyzing agency's refusal to issue Certificate of Loss of Nationality, not report to Congress); Reed v.
8 Salazar, 744 F. Supp. 2d 98, 116 (D.D.C. 2010) (dealing with lack of NEPA report, not report to 9 Congress). Therefore, as discussed in Defendants' opposition and for the reasons set forth by the 10 Ninth Circuit in Guerrero v. Clinton, 157 F.3d 1190, 1195 (9th Cir. 1998), review of the Secretary's 11 compliance with a congressional reporting requirement—either directly or indirectly through his 12 decision—is inappropriate.

13 CONCLUSION

14 For the foregoing reasons, summary judgment should be granted in Defendants' favor on 15 both of Plaintiffs' claims, and this case should be dismissed with prejudice.
