

No. 14-990

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

STEPHEN M. SHAPIRO, O. JOHN BENISEK,
AND MARIA B. PYCHA, Petitioners,

v.

DAVID J. MCMANUS, JR., CHAIRMAN,
MARYLAND STATE BOARD OF ELECTIONS; AND
LINDA H. LAMONE, STATE ADMINISTRATOR OF ELECTIONS, Respondents.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit

BRIEF FOR JUDICIAL WATCH, INC.
AS AMICUS CURIAE SUPPORTING PETITIONERS

MEIR FEDER
Counsel of Record
RAJEEV MUTTREJA
JONES DAY
222 East 41st Street
New York, NY 10017
(212) 326-3939
mfeder@jonesday.com

August 14, 2015

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | Page |
|---|-------------|
| TABLE OF AUTHORITIES..... | ii |
| INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE..... | 1 |
| INTRODUCTION..... | 2 |
| I. THE FOURTH CIRCUIT'S RULE DEFEATS THE PURPOSE OF THREE- JUDGE COURTS BY HAVING ONE JUDGE DECIDE A CLAIM'S LEGAL SUFFICIENCY..... | 5 |
| II. THE FOURTH CIRCUIT'S RULE INVITES SIGNIFICANT PRACTICAL PROBLEMS..... | 8 |
| CONCLUSION | 12 |

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

| | Page(s) |
|--|----------------|
| CASES | |
| Adams v. Clinton , 90 F. Supp. 2d 35 (D.D.C. 2000) | 8 |
| Ariz. State Legislature v. Ariz. Indep. Redistricting Comm’n , 997 F. Supp. 2d 1047 (D. Ariz. 2014)..... | 8 |
| Ashcroft v. Iqbal , 556 U.S. 662 (2009) | 3 |
| Bailey v. Patterson , 369 U.S. 31 (1962) | 3 |
| Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ. , 526 U.S. 629 (1999) | 7 |
| Diaz v. Silver , 932 F. Supp. 462 (E.D.N.Y. 1996)..... | 11 |
| Duckworth v. State Administration Board of Election Laws , 332 F.3d 769 (4th Cir. 2003) | passim |
| Ex parte Collins , 277 U.S. 565 (1928) | 6 |
| Ex parte Poresky , 290 U.S. 30 (1933) | 3 |

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

| | Page(s) |
|---|----------------|
| Fed. Election Comm'n v. Nat'l Conservative Political Action Comm. , 470 U.S. 480 (1985) | 7 |
| Goosby v. Osser , 409 U.S. 512 (1973) | passim |
| Hannis Distilling Co. v. Baltimore , 216 U.S. 285 (1910) | 3 |
| Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp. v. Epstein , 370 U.S. 713 (1962) | 9 |
| Johnson v. Mortham , 915 F. Supp. 1529 (N.D. Fla. 1995) | 8 |
| Kilgarlin v. Hill , 386 U.S. 120 (1967) | 10 |
| LaRouche v. Fowler , 152 F.3d 974 (D.C. Cir. 1998) | 3 |
| MacGovern v. Connolly , 637 F. Supp. 111 (D. Mass. 1986) | 10 |
| Page v. Bartels , 248 F.3d 175 (3d Cir. 2001) | 7 |
| Page v. Va. State Bd. of Elections , 58 F. Supp. 3d 533, 554 (E.D. Va. 2014) | 10 |

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

| | Page(s) |
|---|----------------|
| Parrott v. McManus , No. 1:15-cv-01849 (D. Md.) | 1 |
| Phillips v. United States , 312 U.S. 246 (1941) | 6, 7 |
| Reynolds v. Sims , 377 U.S. 533 (1964) | 10 |
| Shaw v. Barr , 808 F. Supp. 461 (E.D.N.C. 1992)..... | 8 |
| Simkins v. Gressette , 631 F.2d 287 (4th Cir. 1980) | 3 |
| Swift & Co. v. Wickham , 382 U.S. 111 (1965) | 5, 8, 10 |
| Upham v. Seamon , 456 U.S. 37 (1982) | 10 |
| Vera v. Richards , 861 F. Supp. 1304 (S.D. Tex. 1994) | 11 |
| STATUTES | |
| 28 U.S.C. § 1253 | 6 |
| 28 U.S.C. § 2284(a) | 5 |
| 28 U.S.C. § 2284(b) | 2, 5, 6, 9 |

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES
(continued)

| | Page(s) |
|---|----------------|
| OTHER AUTHORITIES | |
| 17A Wright, Miller, Cooper & Amar, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4235 (3d ed. 2014)..... | 2, 3, 6 |
| Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) | passim |
| S. Rep. No. 94-204 (1976), reprinted in 1976 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1988..... | 6 |

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE ¹

Judicial Watch, Inc. (“Judicial Watch”) is a non-partisan educational foundation that seeks to promote transparency, integrity, and accountability in government and fidelity to the rule of law. Judicial Watch regularly files amicus curiae briefs as a means to advance its public interest mission and has appeared as amicus curiae in this Court on a number of occasions.

Judicial Watch believes that the decision below errs on an important issue of federal election law. In particular, Judicial Watch is concerned that the Fourth Circuit’s ruling violates the Three-Judge Court Act and will allow states to delay judicial review of gerrymandered redistricting plans that disenfranchise voters and violate the Constitution. Moreover, on June 24, 2015, Judicial Watch filed a new constitutional challenge to Maryland’s redistricting plan on behalf of several plaintiffs. See Parrott v. McManus, No. 1:15-cv-01849 (D. Md.). The plaintiffs have asked for a three-judge panel in Parrott, but no such panel has been convened yet, and a motion to dismiss is currently pending before the single judge initially assigned to the case.

¹ All parties have consented in writing to the filing of this amicus curiae brief. No counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no person or entity other than amicus curiae or its counsel made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief.

INTRODUCTION

The Three-Judge Court Act reflects Congress’s longstanding judgment that certain lawsuits are too important to be decided by a single district judge. The Act mandates that district courts composed of three judges hear all constitutional challenges to legislative redistricting, as well as certain actions under the Voting Rights Act, the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act, and other federal statutes²—unless the district judge to whom the case is initially assigned “determines that three judges are not required.” 28 U.S.C. § 2284(b)(1). In that circumstance only, the single judge may dismiss the case instead of referring it to a three-judge court. However, this Court has long been clear—and, for decades, the circuits all agreed—that the bar for three-judge referral is quite low, and Congress has never suggested otherwise.

Under that standard, a claim must be heard by a three-judge court unless the claim is “obviously frivolous,” “essentially fictitious,” “wholly insubstantial,” or “obviously without merit”—which occurs only when the claim’s “unsoundness so clearly results from the previous decisions of this court as to foreclose the subject and leave no room for the inference that the questions sought to be raised can be the subject of controversy.” Goosby v. Osser, 409

² These additional statutes include the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Prison Litigation Reform Act, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act of 1971, the Child Internet Protection Act, and others. See 17A Wright, Miller, Cooper & Amar, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4235 nn.3-5 (3d ed. 2014) (collecting examples).

U.S. 512, 518 (1973) (quoting Bailey v. Patterson, 369 U.S. 31, 33 (1962); Ex parte Poresky, 290 U.S. 30, 32 (1933); Hannis Distilling Co. v. Baltimore, 216 U.S. 285, 288 (1910)); see also LaRouche v. Fowler, 152 F.3d 974, 982 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (“The Supreme Court made clear just how minimal a showing is required to establish substantiality in Goosby v. Osser.”). Put differently, one-judge dismissal is appropriate only “if the claim is so insubstantial that it does not invoke federal jurisdiction,” which “will be rare indeed.” 17A Wright, Miller, Cooper & Amar, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4235 (3d ed. 2014). As Petitioners explain, their First Amendment claim plainly satisfies this undemanding standard. Pet. Br. at 35-39.

In 2003, however, the Fourth Circuit parted ways with this long line of authority. Under Duckworth v. State Administration Board of Election Laws, 332 F.3d 769 (4th Cir. 2003), a case is not referable to a three-judge court whenever the complaint fails to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6). Id. at 772-73. The Fourth Circuit has thus replaced the longstanding test of frivolousness with a much less demanding standard that permits many more claims to be withheld from referral to three-judge courts. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (Rule 12(b)(6) requires “a claim to relief that is plausible on its face”).

Notably, the Fourth Circuit did not acknowledge or explain this change. Instead, the Duckworth court simply supported its holding with a citation to an older case, Simkins v. Gressette, 631 F.2d 287, 295 (4th Cir. 1980). But Simkins used not a Rule 12(b)(6) test but instead the well-settled frivolousness standard—and, moreover, cited Goosby for support. It is thus hard to understand the basis for Duckworth's departure from Goosby.

As Petitioners demonstrate, the Fourth Circuit's current test for three-judge referral is wrong for many reasons. Moreover, the Fourth Circuit's novel approach creates significant problems. For one, it enlists a single district judge to decide the legal sufficiency of a redistricting challenge (as part of any Rule 12(b)(6) motion). Such an allocation of authority cannot be squared with Congress's judgment—recognized by this Court and others—that apportionment challenges and other types of three-judge cases are too significant to be initially decided by a single judge. Nor is the difference between one and three judges merely a formality. Redistricting cases raise difficult legal issues on which three-judge courts frequently divide, including at the motion-to-dismiss stage.

Moreover, if referral were governed by the “plausibility” standard that applies to motions under Rule 12(b)(6), the question of whether a case should be dismissed by one judge or heard by three will frequently be subject to dispute—with the possible need for appeals to the courts of appeals and even this Court. Such fights over how many judges should hear the case can only delay adjudication of the case's actual merits. Particularly in redistricting cases, such delays can matter a great deal. Indeed, courts will sometimes decline to order relief in redistricting cases—even if there is a constitutional violation—simply because the election schedule leaves too little time to adjust district lines. This scenario is less likely with the traditional frivolousness standard for referral, which expedites three-judge consideration of the merits. The Fourth Circuit's rule, in contrast, can only slow these cases down.

In short, the Fourth Circuit's interpretation of the Three-Judge Court Act cannot be justified as a legal matter and is likely to have quite damaging consequences as a practical matter. This Court should not let the decision below stand.

I. THE FOURTH CIRCUIT'S RULE
DEFEATS THE PURPOSE OF THREE-
JUDGE COURTS BY HAVING ONE JUDGE DECIDE A CLAIM'S LEGAL SUFFICIENCY.

Three-judge district courts are “a unique feature of our jurisprudence.” Swift & Co. v. Wickham, 382 U.S. 111, 116 (1965). They are available only “when an action is filed challenging the constitutionality of the apportionment of congressional districts or the apportionment of any statewide legislative body” or “when otherwise required by Act of Congress.” 28 U.S.C. § 2284(a). Such cases call for proceedings markedly different from the typical federal lawsuit.

Specifically, when a three-judge court is requested, the judge to whom the suit was initially assigned “shall, unless he determines that three judges are not required, immediately notify the chief judge of the circuit, who shall designate two other judges, at least one of whom shall be a circuit judge.” 28 U.S.C. § 2284(b)(1). Those three judges—the initially assigned district judge, a circuit judge, and a third judge—“shall serve as members of the court to hear and determine the action or proceeding.” Id. Although a single member of the three-judge court “may conduct all proceedings except the trial” and can enter most “orders permitted by the rules of civil procedure,” only the full three-judge panel may “appoint a master, or order a reference, or hear and determine any application for a preliminary or permanent injunction or motion to vacate such an injunction, or enter judgment on the merits.” 28 U.S.C. § 2284(b)(3). In addition, “[a]ny action of a single judge may be reviewed by the full [three-judge] court at any time before final judgment.” Id. Appeals from three-judge district courts are taken directly to this Court. See 28 U.S.C. § 1253.

When enacting this “exceptional procedure,” Congress “sought to assure more weight and greater deliberation by not leaving the fate of such litigation to a single judge.” Phillips v. United States, 312 U.S. 246, 250 (1941). But Congress was also careful to make three-judge courts available only for “a limited class of cases of special importance.” Id. at 249 (quoting Ex parte Collins, 277 U.S. 565, 567 (1928)). That class of cases shrank in 1976, when Congress amended the Three-Judge Court Act. See generally Wright, Miller, Cooper & Amar, supra, § 4235 (discussing Act’s evolution).³ However, Congress “preserve[d] three-judge courts for cases involving congressional reapportionment or the reapportionment of a statewide legislative body because . . . these issues are of such importance that they ought to be heard by a three-judge court.” S. Rep. No. 94-204, at 9 (1976) (emphasis added), reprinted in 1976 U.S.C.C.A.N. 1988, 1996; accord

³ Three-judge courts are no longer available for all constitutional challenges to state laws, for example.

Page v. Bartels, 248 F.3d 175, 190 (3d Cir. 2001) (quoting id.) (noting “the unique importance of apportionment cases”). Thus, as this Court subsequently put it, lawsuits implicating the current Three-Judge Court Act “raise issues that are likely to be of great importance and in Congress’ judgment justify a three-judge court, expedited review, and direct appeal to this Court.” Fed. Election Comm’n v. Nat’l Conservative Political Action Comm., 470 U.S. 480, 487 (1985) (emphasis added) (addressing claims under Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act).

By eliminating three-judge referral whenever a single judge decides that the complaint does not survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the Fourth Circuit pays little heed to the importance of the cases covered by the Three-Judge Court Act, and to Congress’s preference to “not leav[e] the fate of such litigation to a single judge.” Phillips, 312 U.S. at 250. A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) calls for an assessment of both the allegations’ plausibility as well as their “legal sufficiency”—such that a court must accept or reject a plaintiff’s legal theory. Davis v. Monroe Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629, 633 (1999). Accordingly, few events in a case are as important as a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Such motions are precisely what three-judge courts should be deciding, given that these courts exist to ensure “greater deliberation” with respect to the significant cases at issue. Phillips, 312 U.S. at 250. By instead using motions to dismiss to limit access to three-judge courts, the Fourth Circuit has turned the Three-Judge Court Act’s purpose and framework on its head.

This is no small matter. The cases implicated by the Three-Judge Court Act are not just important but also often legally contentious. Indeed, three-judge courts regularly split 2-1 when deciding motions to dismiss in apportionment cases. See, e.g., Ariz. State Legislature v. Ariz. Indep. Redistricting Comm'n, 997 F. Supp. 2d 1047 (D. Ariz. 2014); Adams v. Clinton, 90 F. Supp. 2d 35 (D.D.C. 2000) (per curiam); Johnson v. Mortham, 915 F. Supp. 1529, 1559 (N.D. Fla. 1995); Shaw v. Barr, 808 F. Supp. 461 (E.D.N.C. 1992), rev'd, 509 U.S. 630 (1993).⁴ Under the Fourth Circuit's rule, these cases might not even be referred to a three-judge court, depending on the views of the judge who initially drew the case. There is no basis for such a result, which flies in the face of the Three-Judge Court Act's very reason for existence.

II. THE FOURTH CIRCUIT'S RULE INVITES SIGNIFICANT PRACTICAL PROBLEMS.

Collapsing Rule 12(b)(6) and three-judge referral, as the Fourth Circuit has done, also invites major practical difficulties. These problems underscore how dramatically the Fourth Circuit's approach departs from what Congress intended.

As noted, Congress has provided that a three-judge court's decisions may be appealed directly to this Court, which is "a means of accelerating a final determination on the merits." Swift, 382 U.S. at 119. The circuits may still hear appeals in these cases, but only with respect to whether three-judge referral was wrongly denied. See, e.g., Idlewild Bon Voyage Liquor Corp. v. Epstein, 370 U.S. 713, 715-16 (1962) (per curiam). When that question turns on whether the case is “obviously frivolous,” Goosby, 409 U.S. at 518, denials are less likely, and any appeals of these less-frequent denials should be faster to resolve.

⁴ Though decided in the Fourth Circuit, Shaw predated Duckworth's adoption of a Rule 12(b)(6) standard for three-judge referral.

Not so with the Fourth Circuit’s rule. Under Duckworth, single-judge courts deny referral more frequently, as Petitioners have previously explained. See Pet. at 18-20. Though these denials can be appealed to the courts of appeals, such appeals—by turning on the more nuanced Rule 12(b)(6) standard—will likely take longer to decide. And the losing party could then seek this Court’s discretionary review of any decision—all, again, just to determine whether a three-judge court should even hear the case.

The inefficiencies of the Fourth Circuit’s rule are not limited to cases in which referral is denied. Even if a Fourth Circuit district judge grants referral by rejecting a motion to dismiss, the two judges then added to the panel might believe that the motion should have gone the other way. These judges could overrule their fellow panelist’s initial judgment. See 28 U.S.C. § 2284(b)(3) (“Any action of a single judge may be reviewed by the full court at any time before final judgment.”). And the mere possibility of such a reversal will accordingly invite relitigation of the motion to dismiss that had just been decided. Even if the first judge’s ruling holds up (because one of the two new judges agrees with it), the Rule 12(b)(6) fight will have taken two rounds instead of one.

These delays matter, especially in redistricting cases. As a general matter, any inefficiencies in these cases run counter to Congress’s attempts to “accelerat[e] a final determination on the merits” in such litigation. Swift, 382 U.S. at 119. But the pace of a redistricting case can also affect not just when but how the case is decided.

Three-judge courts must “act and rely upon general equitable principles” when weighing possible remedies in redistricting cases. Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 585 (1964). And timing considerations—such as “the proximity of a forthcoming election”—can preclude relief “even though the existing apportionment scheme [is] found invalid.” Id.; see also, e.g., Upham v. Seamon, 456 U.S. 37, 44 (1982) (“[W]e have authorized District Courts to order or to permit elections to be held pursuant to apportionment plans that do not in all respects measure up to the legal requirements, even constitutional requirements.”); Kilgarlin v. Hill, 386 U.S. 120, 121 (1967) (per curiam) (affirming the district court’s decision allowing state legislative elections to proceed even though districting plan was “constitutionally infirm in certain respects”).

This concern is far from theoretical. Courts regularly deny immediate relief in redistricting cases not because the underlying constitutional claim lacks merit, but because of timing. See, e.g., Page v. Va. State Bd. of Elections, 58 F. Supp. 3d 533, 554 (E.D. Va. 2014) (three-judge court) (holding districting plan unconstitutional, but allowing elections to proceed under that plan because the general election was “roughly two months away”); MacGovern v. Connolly, 637 F. Supp. 111, 115 (D. Mass. 1986) (three-judge court) (per curiam) (dismissing “substantively viable” redistricting challenge because of impending election, such that new district lines would “cause enormous disruption to Massachusetts voters, to candidates, and to the electoral process”); Diaz v. Silver, 932 F. Supp. 462, 468 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (three-judge court) (per curiam) (assuming that challenge would prevail on merits and denying relief because “the harm to the public in delaying either the primary or the general election or even changing the rules as they now stand substantially outweighs the likely benefit to the plaintiffs of granting a preliminary injunction at this time”); Vera v. Richards, 861 F. Supp. 1304 (S.D. Tex. 1994) (three-judge court) (holding Texas district map unconstitutional but permitting its use in upcoming election), aff’d sub nom., Bush v. Vera, 517 U.S. 952 (1996).

The traditional standard for three-judge referral reduces the odds that timing will force a court to tolerate a constitutional violation—for when the initial judge is simply making sure the challenge is not “obviously frivolous,” Goosby, 409 U.S. at 518, it is less likely that a case will linger while the judge considers referral. But when that judge is instead applying the Fourth Circuit’s more demanding standard for referral, see Duckworth, 332 F.3d at 772-73, the initial decision may well take longer, referral-related appeals (including to this Court) become more likely, and it could take significantly longer before a three-judge court even has the opportunity to reach the merits of the challenge. And when the clock is always counting down towards the next election, such a delay can control whether the alleged constitutional violation can be remedied or if it is something that a state's voters simply must swallow. Under the Fourth Circuit's approach, the Three-Judge Court Act's ability to protect against such scenarios is substantially weakened. This Court should accordingly reject that rule and reaffirm the well-settled frivolousness standard for three-judge referral.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the decision below should be vacated.

Respectfully submitted.

MEIR FEDER
Counsel of Record
RAJEEV MUTTREJA
JONES DAY
222 East 41st Street
New York, NY 10017
(212) 326-3939
mfeder@jonesday.com

August 14, 2015

Counsel for Amicus Curiae