

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA
NO. 1:15-cv-399

SANDRA LITTLE COVINGTON, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, et al.,

Defendants.

PLAINTIFFS' STATEMENT IN RESPONSE TO COURT'S
NOTICE OF JUNE 9, 2017

In response to the Court's Notice of June 9, 2017, Plaintiffs respectfully submit the following statement addressing (1) how the components of the "equitable weighing process" favor granting Plaintiffs immediate relief, including adoption of a new districting plan and special elections in 2017, North Carolina v. Covington, No. 16-1023, slip op. at 2 (June 5, 2017) (per curiam), (2) why the Attorney General is the only officer authorized by state law to speak for the State of North Carolina, and has the authority to speak for the State on all the equitable considerations relevant to the remedial issues here including the three factors identified by the Supreme Court, (3) how the General Assembly has refused to comply with the Court's remedial order of August 2016, and (4) why the General Assembly is not entitled to further time to do so. (See Doc. 153 at 3-4.) Further, Plaintiffs contend that the question of when remedial districts must be drawn is separate and distinct from the question of whether equitable considerations justify special elections in 2017. Plaintiffs will address each of the Court’s issues as they are outlined in the Notice.<sup>1</sup>

I. This Court was correct to conclude that the balance of equities favors holding special elections in 2017.

In reversing and remanding this Court’s November 29, 2016 remedial order, the Supreme Court did not hold that special elections in 2017 are an inappropriate remedy in these circumstances, acknowledging instead that “this Court has never addressed whether or when a special election may be a proper remedy for a racial gerrymander.” No. 16-1023, slip op. at 2-3. Rather, the Supreme Court remanded the case so that this Court could engage in “an equitable weighing process” that considers “the severity and nature of the particular constitutional violation, the extent of the likely disruption to the ordinary processes of governance if early elections are imposed, and the need to act with proper judicial restraint when intruding on state sovereignty.” Id. Ample legal precedent and evidence already in the record support the conclusion that special elections in 2017 are warranted. Plaintiffs will address the ongoing harm they have suffered, the relatively minimal potential disruption to the ordinary processes of governance, and the appropriateness of their proposed remedy in turn.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs have also requested an expedited evidentiary hearing to further assist the Court in conducting its analysis of whether special elections should be held in 2017. (See Pls.’ Mot. for Expedited Evidentiary Hr’g, Doc. 151.)

A. The well-documented harms of racial gerrymandering continue to severely burden millions of North Carolina residents nearly six years after the challenged districts took effect.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly condemned the unconstitutional use of race in assigning voters to election districts, and has thoroughly explored the many ways in which race-based classifications like the one at issue here undermine the democratic process and harm individual voters. See, e.g., Shaw v. Reno, 509 U.S. 630, 643, 647, 648 (1995) (racial gerrymandering is “stigmatiz[ing],” “pernicious,” “political apartheid,” and “altogether antithetical to our system of representative democracy”); Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 U.S. 614, 630-31 (1991) (“causes continued hurt and injury”); United Jewish Orgs. v. Carey, 430 U.S. 144, 173 (1977) (Brennan, J., concurring in part) (“bears no relationship to an individual’s worth or needs”); Wright v. Rockefeller, 376 U.S. 52, 66-67 (1964) (Douglas, J., dissenting) (“a divisive force in a community” and “at war with the democratic ideal”); Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81, 100 (1943) (“odious to a free people”).

The record in this case is replete with examples of how these racially gerrymandered legislative districts have harmed North Carolina voters and elected officials since the districts were enacted in 2011.<sup>3</sup> Plaintiff Rev. Julian Pridgen explained

I, 4/11/16, 213:12-214:10. Plaintiff Sandra Covington of Cumberland County testified that she was “plucked out of my district and placed into another district simply because of my race,” and could no longer vote for her candidate of choice, who was white and was drawn out of her district and placed in a majority-black district. Trial Tr. vol. II, 4/12/16, 102:19-23, 102:19-103:2. Former Sen. Eric Mansfield told the Court that the districts were premised on the idea “that I could not represent whites, not because I was incompetent, not because I was inarticulate, not because I did not have great character, it was just simply because I was black.” Trial Tr. vol. II, 4/12/16, 124:18-126:11. Former legislator Albert Kirby echoed that assessment:

[I]t was not necessary to increase the number of African-Americans in my district in the manner that it was increased. In fact, I would have done just fine. They could have decreased it. I was born and raised in Clinton. Most of the people in Sampson County I know very well. I know what they think. They know me. And the idea of having to add African-Americans to vote for me was just—was—it’s kind of insulting.

Trial Tr. vol. II, 4/12/16, 150:16-23. Rep. Larry Hall of Durham and Sen. Angela Bryant of Rocky Mount described the voter confusion created by district lines that hopped from one side of a street to another, split precincts, and divided communities of interest. Trial Tr. vol. II, 4/12/16, 12:9-13:2, 13:5-11, 15:8-20, 17:17-18:7, 18:20-19:11, 22:25-23:9 (testimony of Angela Bryant); id. at 187:7-24, 212:6-19 (testimony of Larry Hall); see also Pls.’ Ex. 2112 (polling showed statistically significant difference in ability of voters to identify candidates who would appear on their ballot in districts that were highly non-compact and had many split precincts). Sen. Dan Blue of Wake County and former Sen. Dan Clodfelter of Mecklenburg County testified about how the racially gerrymandered district lines set back decades of progress in building cross-racial coalitions in many parts of the state. Trial Tr. vol. I, 4/11/16, 72:2-6, 72:21-73:13, 80:5-82:25 (testimony of Dan Blue); Trial Tr. vol. II, 4/12/16, 68:6-69:10 (testimony of Dan Clodfelter).

North Carolina residents have been subject to this unconstitutional race-based classification since the General Assembly’s 2011 redistricting process, and continue to be governed by a state legislature elected from a racially gerrymandered districting scheme. (See 11/29/16 Order, Doc. 140 (acknowledging that “the legislators just elected under the unconstitutional racial gerrymander . . . will come into office in mid-January 2017”).) To achieve this result, as Plaintiffs proved to the satisfaction of this unanimous Court, the General Assembly systematically moved white voting age population out of the so-called VRA districts and moved black voting age population into those districts in its place. See, e.g., Trial Tr. vol. II, 4/12/16, 120:23-122:15, 126:23-127:7, 129:19-25 (testimony of Eric Mansfield); 3d Joint Stip., Doc. 90, ¶¶ 4, 22, 37, 55, 72, 90, 123, 140, 155, 189, 207, 226, 244, 262, 279, 304, 316, 349, 370, 403, 418, 430.

This wide-ranging racial gerrymander taints legislative election districts in seventy-seven of North Carolina’s one hundred counties, which together contain nearly eight million people—or eighty-three percent of the state’s population—who since 2012 have been denied the opportunity to be represented by legislators elected from constitutional districts. (See Decl. of Thomas Hofeller, Oct. 28, 2016, Doc. 136-1.) To remedy this sprawling constitutional violation in compliance with the state constitutional whole county provision, House districts impacting sixty counties and Senate districts impacting sixty-five counties must be redrawn, for a total of seventy-seven counties affected by necessary changes in either a House or Senate district or both.<sup>4</sup> See id. Significantly, to Plaintiffs' knowledge, there has never been a case where such a large percentage of the legislative districts in a state have been declared racial gerrymanders and unconstitutional. The extensive scope of the violation here weighs heavily in favor of this Court's quick action. While of course it may be true that a judicial finding that one or two districts out of hundreds in a state legislative body are racial gerrymanders or otherwise illegal may not, on balance, necessitate special elections, see No. 16-1023, slip op. at 3, that simply is not the case here. Nearly all of the state is affected by the legislature's unconstitutional line-drawing. A special election is warranted where the scope of the unconstitutional action impacts eighty-three percent of the state's population.

North Carolinians have the right to have their laws enacted by representatives elected from constitutionally compliant districts. Yet this illegally constituted legislature has demonstrated that it is willing to go to unconstitutional lengths to retain power. Since the districts drawn in 2011 took effect, the General Assembly has enacted a number of laws that state and federal courts have struck down as unconstitutional, the majority of which have been related to elections.<sup>5</sup> The public's faith in the legitimacy of the legislature is thus undermined so long as the constitutional violations continue unabated.

B. Adopting a new districting plan and holding special elections in 2017 is administratively feasible, and expedited evidentiary submissions on this issue are appropriate.

To demonstrate that adopting a new districting plan and holding special elections in 2017 is administratively feasible, Plaintiffs renew their request for an expedited evidentiary hearing, or deadlines for the submissions of affidavit testimony, to address the fact-intensive inquiry as of this date into “the extent of the likely disruption to the ordinary processes of governance if early elections are imposed.” (Notice, Doc. 153 at 4; see Pls.’ Mot. for Expedited Evidentiary Hr’g, Doc. 151.)

<sup>5</sup> See, e.g., N.C. State Conf. of NAACP v. McCrory, 831 F.3d 204 (4th Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 581 U.S. __ (2017) (parts of Session Law 2013-381, a comprehensive election reform measure, held unconstitutional); City of Greensboro v. Guilford Cty. Bd. of Elections, No. 1:15-cv-559, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50253 (M.D.N.C. Apr. 3, 2017) (redistricting plan for the Greensboro City Council violated one person, one vote); Cooper v. Berger, No. 16-cvs-15636 (Wake Cty. Super. Ct. Mar. 17, 2017) (three-judge panel) (law restructuring boards of elections and appointment process for those boards violated separation of powers); Raleigh Wake Citizens Ass’n v. Wake Cty. Bd. of Elections, 827 F.3d 333 (4th Cir. 2016) (two separately-enacted redistricting plans for the Wake County Commission and School Board violated one person, one vote); City of Asheville v. State, 794 S.E.2d 759 (N.C. 2016) (law involuntarily transferring city water system to a metropolitan district violated N.C. Const. art. II, § 24); N.C. Ass’n of Educators v. State, 786 S.E.2d 255 (N.C. 2016) (Career Status Law unlawfully infringed upon the contract rights of those teachers who had already achieved career status in violation of the Contract Clause, U.S. Const. art. I, § 10); State ex rel. McCrory v. Berger, 368 N.C. 633 (2016) (law creating coal ash commission violated separation of powers); Faires v. State Bd. of Elections, No. 15-cvs-15903 (Wake Cty. Super. Ct.) (three-judge panel), aff’d by equally divided court, 368 N.C. 825 (2016) (judicial retention elections violated state constitution).

To the extent that Legislative Defendants might contend there is not sufficient time to hold special elections in November 2017, or that ordering an abbreviated election schedule might somehow infringe on the sovereignty of the State, the Court need only look to the North Carolina Supreme Court's remedy in Stephenson v. Bartlett. See 355 N.C. 354, 358-61, 386 (2002) (holding that the General Assembly's legislative redistricting plan enacted after the 2000 Census violated the whole county provision of the state constitution). On April 30, 2002, the state Supreme Court in Stephenson affirmed a trial court order invalidating numerous districts in both the House and Senate plans enacted by the General Assembly and remanded the matter to the trial court for remedial proceedings. Id. On remand, the trial court granted the General Assembly approximately two weeks to enact new plans and to submit those plans to the trial court for review and approval. See Stephenson v. Bartlett, 357 N.C. 301, 303 (2003). On May 17, 2002, the General Assembly as directed enacted new plans and presented them to the trial court. Id. On May 31, 2002, the trial court rejected those plans and imposed its own plans. Id. at 303-04.

Efforts to have the trial court's extraordinary exercise of judicial power reversed were rejected by the North Carolina Supreme Court on June 4, 2002. Id. at 304. The trial court's plans took effect on July 12, 2002, when they were precleared by the United States Department of Justice as then required by the Voting Rights Act. Id. Primary elections were held on September 10, and the general election was held November 5, 2002, all without incident. Id. Thus, even in North Carolina, there is ample precedent for the court action that Plaintiffs seek here.

C. The Court's power to order adoption of a new districting plan and special elections in 2017 is well supported by federal precedent.

Some infringement on state sovereignty is inevitable in the case of special elections, yet the power of a federal district court to order a special election where there is a constitutional violation is well settled. See, e.g., Pope v. County of Albany, 687 F.3d 565, 569-70 (2d Cir. 2012) (collecting cases on power to order special election even when election under invalid law has already taken place); Arbor Hill Concerned Citizens v. County of Albany, 357 F.3d 260, 262-63 (2d Cir. 2004) (collecting cases on power to order special elections). A court's remedial power in a racial gerrymandering case is no less than its remedial power in any other case involving unconstitutional racial discrimination in elections. Cf. Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Educ., 402 U.S. 1, 15-16 (1971) (one type of racial discrimination case "does not differ fundamentally from other cases involving the framing of equitable remedies to repair the denial of a constitutional right"). District and appellate courts have not hesitated to order special elections in cases in which a redistricting scheme violates the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment or the Voting Rights Act.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, the Supreme Court has approved special elections in a case that involved one person, one vote claims as well as racial discrimination claims. See Connor v. Coleman, 425 U.S. 675 679 (1976) (in a mandamus case, directing the district court to “order[] any necessary special elections to be held to coincide with the November 1976 Presidential and congressional elections, or in any event at the earliest practicable date thereafter.”) These courts have ordered districts to be redrawn and new elections held within a matter of months, and have ordered term lengths shortened and state constitutional provisions suspended to effectuate remedies in election discrimination cases.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>6</sup> See, e.g., Cousins v. City Council of Chicago, 503 F.2d 912, 914 (7th Cir. 1974) (ordering special elections in a 14th Amendment case involving race-based redistricting); Keller v. Gilliam, 454 F.2d 55, 57-58 (5th Cir. 1972) (one person, one vote case); United States v. Osceola County, 474 F. Supp. 2d 1254, 1255 (M.D. Fla. 2006) (Section 2 vote dilution case); Smith v. Beasley, 946 F. Supp. 1174, 1212 (D.S.C. 1996) (racial gerrymandering case); Ketchum v. City Council of Chicago, 630 F. Supp. 551, 565 (N.D. Ill. 1985) (Section 2 vote dilution case); Tucker v. Burford, 603 F. Supp. 276 (N.D. Miss. 1985) (one person, one vote case); Cosner v. Dalton, 522 F. Supp. 350, 364 (E.D. Va. 1981) (three-judge panel) (one person, one vote case).

But the court need not look very far for support for the remedial actions requested here: In an analogous racial gerrymandering case within the Fourth Circuit, a three-judge district court in South Carolina ordered special elections in nine legislative districts in Gilliam*, 454 F.2d 55, 57-58 (5th Cir. 1972) (providing up to five months for the district court to approve a new districting plan and order new elections, with the newly elected representatives to take office within 30 days of their election); Brown v. Ky. Leg. Research Comm’n, 966 F. Supp. 2d 709, 726 (E.D. Ky. 2013) (in August, three days before a scheduled special legislative session, enjoining use of the unconstitutional districts in the November election and noting that a state constitution residency requirement did not constrain the court under the federal constitution); Perez v. Perry, No. 5:11-cv-360, ECF No. 685 at 3 (W.D. Tex. Tex. Nov. 4, 2011) (same) (previously docketed in this case as Doc. 134-3); United States v. Osceola County, 474 F. Supp. 2d 1254, 1255 (M.D. Fla. 2006) (in December, adopting the plaintiffs’ proposed plan when the county’s remedial map was inadequate and ordering special elections in the spring); Smith v. Beasley, 946 F. Supp. 1174, 1212 (D.S.C. 1996) (where the state constitution set term lengths, shortening the terms of legislators elected under an unconstitutional plan and ordering special elections for representatives to serve the balance of those terms); Ketchum v. City Council of Chicago, 630 F. Supp. 551, 565 (N.D. Ill. 1985) (in December, adopting a compromise plan and scheduling a special election in all affected districts to coincide with already-scheduled elections in March); Tucker v. Burford, 603 F. Supp. 276, 279 (N.D. Miss. 1985) (in February, setting aside the previous November’s elections and ordering that incumbents should hold office only until new elections could be held under the new districts the county had already begun to redraw); Cosner v. Dalton, 522 F. Supp. 350, 364 (E.D. Va. 1981) (in August, shortening legislators’ terms and ordering that while legislative elections should proceed under the unconstitutional districts in November, the state must draw new districts by February 1).

1997. See Smith v. Beasley, 946 F. Supp. 1174, 1212 (D.S.C. 1996). In its opinion in September 1996, the district court allowed elections to proceed under the unconstitutional districts in November 1996. Id. The court shortened the terms of office provided for in the South Carolina Constitution to one year, and ordered that the representatives elected in the 1997 special elections would serve the balance of those representatives' terms. Id. The same nature of remedy (shortened terms and odd-year elections) is necessary here.

After three election cycles under North Carolina's unconstitutional legislative districting scheme, the most recent of which represents the "unusual case" contemplated in Reynolds v. Sims, the Court need not balance the equities in a neutral fashion that treats as equals the millions of residents whose rights have been violated and the interests of the ongoing violators. 377 U.S. 533, 585 (1964). Rather, the Court's "task is to correct . . . the condition that offends the Constitution," in this case a legislative districting scheme that violates the equal protection clause because it makes impermissible use of race. Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. of Educ., 402 U.S. 1, 16 (1971). The Court has already enjoined use of the unconstitutional districts and given the General Assembly ten months to adopt a new districting plan, and as explained in Part IV below, ordering an interim remedial plan in those circumstances is appropriate. Further, while the Court should engage in some expedited fact-finding as part of its analysis of whether special elections should be held, Plaintiffs' position is that no intervening events have occurred since the Court previously balanced the equities and found that special elections in 2017 are feasible and appropriate that would alter that conclusion. The balance of the equities continues to support an expedited schedule for adoption of a remedial map and special elections in the new districts in 2017.

II. Under state law, the Attorney General speaks on behalf of the State of North Carolina.

The State of North Carolina, named as a Defendant in this case and not asserting sovereign immunity, see 1st Am. Compl. ¶ 41 (Doc. 11); Defs.’ Answer to Am. Compl. ¶ 41 (Doc. 14), is the Defendant with authority under state law to address the equitable considerations relevant to the remedies requested by the Plaintiffs. The Attorney General of North Carolina is a constitutional officer directly elected by the people. N.C. Const. art. III, § 7(1). North Carolina law makes clear that the Attorney General represents the State in litigation. “It shall be the duty of the Attorney General: (1) To defend all actions in the appellate division in which the State shall be interested, or a party, and to appear for the State in any other court or tribunal in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, in which the State may be a party or interested.” N.C. Gen. Stat. § 114-2. In addition, the Attorney General serves as “counsel for all departments, officers, agencies, institutions, commissions, bureaus or other organized activities of the State.” N.C. Gen. Stat. § 147-17(b); see also N.C. Gen. Stat. § 114-2 (the duties of the Attorney General include representing “all State departments, agencies, institutions, commissions, bureaus or other organized activities of the State which receive support in whole or in part from the State.”). Therefore, in the context of this litigation, the Attorney General speaks for the State of North Carolina and for the North Carolina State Board of Elections.

Where the Attorney General is involved in an action on behalf of the State, the general rule is that “the attorney general has control of the action and may settle it when he determines it is in the best interests of the state to do so.” Tice v. Dept. of Transportation, 67 N.C. App. 48, 51 (1984). Particularly where the case involves constitutional issues, the Attorney General is “within his authority” to address those issues on behalf of the state. Hendon v. North Carolina State Bd. of Elections, 633 F. Supp. 454, 459 (W.D. N.C. 1986). Indeed, “the Court must resolve any ambiguity in North Carolina statutory provisions defining the reach of the Attorney General’s authority in favor of a broader scope consistent with the common law.” Nash Cnty. Bd. of Educ. v. Biltmore, 464 F. Supp. 1027, 1033 (E.D.N.C. 1978).

Under the North Carolina Constitution, the General Assembly is just one distinct branch of the State’s government. N.C. Const. art. II, § 1 (“The legislative power of the State shall be vested in the General Assembly.”). Allowing legislators to speak for the entire state would usurp the power the state constitution and state statutes vest in the Attorney General. Here, the Attorney General appropriately represents the State of North Carolina and the North Carolina State Board of Elections, and those parties are the appropriate defendants to address the equitable considerations relevant to whether special elections in 2017 are an appropriate remedy in this case.

III. The General Assembly has refused to comply with the Court’s August 2016 remedial order, which was not stayed or vacated.

Since this Court’s memorandum opinion and order in August 2016 directed the General Assembly “to draw remedial districts in their next legislative session” and enjoined the State from holding elections in the racially gerrymandered districts after November 2016, the General Assembly has yet to consider or adopt any remedial map. (See Mem. Op., Doc. 123.) The General Assembly's current legislative session began in January 2017, and legislative leaders have stated publicly that they intend to adjourn for the year in early July 2017. See NC Legislature Aims to Leave Town by Early July, News & Observer (May 5, 2017), <http://www.newsobserver.com/news/politics-government/politics-columns-blogs/under-the-dome/article148796669.html>.

Following the Supreme Court's summary affirmance and remand order in this case, on June 7, 2017 Gov. Roy Cooper issued a proclamation formally calling the General Assembly into extra session to adopt a remedial districting plan. (Proclamation, Doc. 150-1.) On June 8, 2017, legislative leaders took action to formally disregard the governor's proclamation and refused to convene the extra session, citing the fact that this Court had not yet received jurisdiction to enter a remedial order. See Laura Leslie, Lawmakers Disqualify Cooper's Session Call, WRAL (June 8, 2017), <http://www.wral.com/lawmakers-disqualify-cooper-s-session-call/16750466>; Colin Campbell, Cooper Calls for Special Legislative Election Before Next Year's Session, News & Observer (June 12, 2017), <http://www.newsobserver.com/news/politics-government/state-politics/article155731354.html>. In a June 13, 2017 filing in the Supreme Court, Legislative Defendants opposed Plaintiffs' application for expedited issuance of a mandate. Response to Application for Issuance of Mandate Forthwith 1-2, North Carolina v. Covington, Nos. 16A1202 & 16A1203 (U.S. June 13, 2017) (attached as Exhibit A). The State also filed a response stating that it consents to the immediate issuance of a mandate and that “the public interest favors allowing the three-judge court to consider the property remedy in this case as promptly as possible.” Response of State of N.C. and Bd. of Elections to Appellees’ Application for Issuance of Mandate Forthwith 2, North Carolina v. Covington, Nos. 16A1202 & 16A1203 (U.S. June 13, 2017) (attached as Exhibit B).

Moreover, the failure to enact remedial districts is unjustified. While the extent of the constitutional violation here is extensive, impacting eighty-three percent of the state’s population, see supra at 5, the effort needed to correct it is not significant. Indeed, Dr. Hofeller filed an affidavit in this proceeding in October 2016 identifying what, in his opinion, are “the Optimal WCG’s [whole county groupings] mandated by the North Carolina Supreme Court’s Stephenson decisions,” which he concluded “would be the Optimal WCG’s used for any new General Assembly plans drafted subsequent to the Court’s 2016 decision in the Covington case.” (Decl. of Thomas Hofeller, Doc. 136-1, at 5, 16, 19.) That step of the redrawing process has already been completed. Moreover, as he points out, “many of the districts in the rural areas are entirely contained within single-district groupings and are self-drawing.” (Id. at 8.) All that remains is to subdivide the county groupings that contain more than one district into the required number of districts. There is no reason why new district lines for the House and Senate districts in the affected areas cannot be made public and enacted by the General Assembly while the question of when those districts might be implemented is being resolved.

IV. The State is not entitled to further time to comply with the Court’s August 2016 remedial order.

After ten months of inaction since this Court’s August 2016 order and a formal refusal to adopt a remedial districting plan following the Supreme Court’s summary affirmance and remand order in this case, the General Assembly has “fail[ed] to reapportion according to federal constitutional requisites in a timely fashion after having had an adequate opportunity to do so.” Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 586 (1964). In those circumstances, “judicial relief becomes appropriate” in the form of a court-ordered interim plan. Id.

In Reynolds, the Supreme Court approved of just such an action, finding that:

the court below acted with proper judicial restraint, after the Alabama Legislature had failed to act effectively in remedying the constitutional deficiencies in the State’s legislative apportionment scheme, in ordering its own temporary reapportionment plan into effect, at a time sufficiently early to permit the holding of elections pursuant to that plan without great difficulty, and in prescribing a plan admittedly provisional in purpose so as not to usurp the primary responsibility for reapportionment which rests with the legislature.

Indeed, a court possesses the equitable power to postpone or even cancel elections, and to impose new redistricting plans if the jurisdiction fails to do so. See, e.g., Mahan v. Howell, 410 U.S. 315, 332-33 (1973) (finding district court did not abuse its discretion in postponing primary elections from June until September); Personhuballah v. Alcorn, 155 F. Supp. 3d 552, 555-56 (E.D. Va. 2016) (three-judge panel) (the court appointed a special master to draw an appropriate remedial plan when the General Assembly failed to act by a court-mandated deadline, and adopted that plan); Larios v. Cox, 314 F. Supp. 2d 1357 (N.D. Ga. 2004) (three-judge panel) (appointing special master to prepare interim apportionment maps for legislative election districts when Georgia General Assembly failed to do so by court deadline); Butterworth v. Dempsey, 229 F. Supp. 754 (D. Conn.), aff'd sub nom. Pinney v. Butterworth, 378 U.S. 564 (1964), on remand or subsequent appeal, 237 F. Supp. 302 (D. Conn. 1965) (setting deadlines by which a special session of the legislature must adopt remedial maps, and appointing a special master to prepare interim maps in the event the legislature failed to act by the deadline or adopted maps that did not remedy the constitutional violation); see also Harris v. McCrory, 159 F. Supp. 3d 600, 627 (M.D.N.C. 2016) (three-judge panel) (providing two weeks for the legislature to adopt new districts, during which the North Carolina General Assembly adopted new maps and a schedule for special elections in the redrawn districts).

In Butterworth v. Dempsey, upon receiving the Supreme Court's mandate the three-judge district court issued a memorandum and order setting a deadline for the Connecticut General Assembly to adopt a new districting plan, and appointing a special master to begin work in case the legislature failed to act by the deadline or enacted new maps that did not remedy the constitutional violation. 237 F. Supp. at 311, 312-13. The district court explained:

This Court has repeatedly stressed its preference that reapportionment of the legislature be done by the legislature itself rather than by the Court. We still prefer it that way. But the hour is late. And we now believe, in view of the ample and repeated opportunities which have been afforded to the legislature to perform what is primarily its function of reapportioning itself, that we as a Court must act if the legislature does not succeed in doing so. Hence our appointment of a special master to aid the Court in discharging its duty if further opportunity to the legislature to perform the task proves fruitless.

Id. at 308-10. The three-judge panel in Larios v. Cox took a similar approach, appointing a special master while encouraging the Georgia General Assembly, which had missed the court deadline to draw new districts and was currently in session, to enact a plan of its own before the court's remedial proceedings ended. 306 F. Supp. 2d 1212, 1213-14 (N.D. Ga. 2004).

The General Assembly's refusal to comply with this Court's August 2016 remedial order has consequences for voters and for potential candidates, who want to know what the new district configurations will look like. Here, regardless of the equitable considerations relating to a special election, the Court has the remedial power to hold that the General Assembly's extraordinary refusal to convene a special session as duly proclaimed by the Governor, and its refusal begin any process to adopt a remedial plan since August 2016, leaves the court with no option but to itself impose remedial plan for use in any future legislative elections. Such a remedy would provide the expediency needed to minimize the burden on state elections officials, the constitutional vetting needed to promote public confidence in elections, and the relief needed to ensure that Plaintiffs and millions of North Carolina residents have an opportunity to vote in elections free from racial discrimination.

Alternatively, to extend even greater deference to the legislature in light of the Court's obligation to give the legislature the first opportunity to remedy a constitutional violation in redistricting cases, Wise v. Lipscomb, 437 U.S. 535, 540 (1978), the Court could give notice that should the General Assembly not act to adopt a new plan within the next two weeks, the Court will order the use of remedial districts recommended by a special master as soon as the mandate issues from the U.S. Supreme Court. See Larios v. Cox, 306 F. Supp. 2d 1212, 1214 (N.D. Ga. 2004) (appointing special master while the Georgia General Assembly was in session in the event that the legislature failed to act by court deadline or failed to adopt a plan that remedied constitutional violation).

V. Conclusion

Plaintiffs and the people of North Carolina have not had the opportunity to elect legislators from non-racially discriminatory districts since 2010. Since that time, the state's residents and democratic process have suffered immeasurable harm, and that damage cannot be remedied at law. Plaintiffs reiterate their requests that this Court expedite the remedial process and any further briefing, set immediate deadlines for the General Assembly to adopt a remedial plan and retain a special master to begin work on a court-ordered plan in the event the General Assembly fails to do so, and schedule an evidentiary hearing as soon as possible on the narrow question of whether special elections are feasible in 2017.

Respectfully submitted this 15th day of June, 2017.
