PLAINTIFF JOHN T. MORRIS’S RESPONSE TO COURT’S REQUEST FOR ADVISORY AS TO QUESTIONS ENUMERATED
IN ORDER ISSUED MARCH 11, 2013

As I mentioned in my last advisory to the Court - “as a pro se party, and a party with a dissimilar claim in respect to almost all of the other claims in this consolidated action, it is obvious that any attempt to answer most of the questions this Court is soliciting would certainly be naive on this claimant’s part.” I have developed some expertise in the issues that pertain to my case but any legal knowledge I have is not broad enough to attempt to address issues dealing with the Voting Rights Act even though there is some overlap between my claim and those of the other parties. The fine lawyers and judicial personnel who are part of these proceedings have expertise and experience so far beyond my own that anything I could say in a legal sense would be embarrassing. But there are some things that I could say as someone who has been more than a casual observer, and since I have had a need to stay abreast of all of the proceedings in respect to the various courts and the media.

Since I believe we have a very politicized Supreme Court and taking into consideration the decisions that the Court has made up to this point I believe it is likely that the Court will find Section 5 unconstitutional in which case it would appear that the D.C. Court’s decision in respect to Section 5 becomes moot. This I believe brings the case back to the District Court here in Texas where the defendant State of Texas I believe will attempt to make the parties agreed upon map/maps final. Assuming the plaintiffs have stipulated before signing off on them that the agreed upon map/maps did not answer all of the issues in their complaints, or in the alternative they can convince a court that this is so, than this Court will need to continue with the litigation and come to a final decision. I naively believe the aforesaid will be the case..

Submitted with respect this day March 24th, 2013
