Andy,

Here is the link to the elections info on the GAB website

<http://elections.state.wi.us/section.asp?linkid=155&locid=47>

I've also attached a spreadsheet we received from LTSB with election data for the decade. This data was compiled prior to the date census data was released to Wisconsin, so it may not match up exactly to the census blocks but it will be close. If we get an updated spreadsheet before tomorrow, I'll forward that to you.

Tad

Again excuse my ignorance if I am asking the wrong questions and please set me straight if I am. Which set of data and what races should I be using to create our political baseline numbers? I want to make sure we are using the exact same data and races to draw our districts that you are.

Not a problem. We are using a shorthand that appears to work, with the caveat that we are scheduling our political expert to come in and see if he agrees or would recommend different races. For now, we are using a 3-race composite of GOP Presidential in 2008 and 2004 plus Attorney General for 2010.

I'll let you know if that changes for any reason.

Finally got the software loaded. I'm going to load the census and political data today. I have a couple questions. Is there a good time for me to call you today?

The only thing I have to do between now and 3:00 is run out and get some lunch, so anytime in the next few hours is good.

Any word on whether your IT guys can help me out? I'd be happy to work out an arrangement to compensate them for assisting me during their "free time." Even if they can just talk me through the process over the phone sometime this week I'd be grateful and willing to pay them for their services. Can you tell I'm getting desperate?

I know, it's a hassle, even when you have on-call tech support. It doesn't look like our tech guys can support you, but I think what we can do is if we can come up with an external hard drive, we can copy the data onto that and then you should be able to upload it directly to your computer. We are presently trying to figure out what files we need to give you so it all works, but I'm hopeful that this solution will work.

Any final decision on what races will be used?
