

That question you get asked over and over?

SHOULDA BEEN A SNAGIT. 🇺🇸

LEARN MORE

This copy is for your personal, non-commercial use only. To order presentation-ready copies for distribution to your colleagues, clients or customers visit <https://www.djreprints.com>.

<https://www.wsj.com/articles/hispanic-voters-now-evenly-split-between-parties-wsj-poll-finds-11638972769>

U.S.

Hispanic Voters Now Evenly Split Between Parties, WSJ Poll Finds

Republicans have made rapid gains among a crucial voting demographic that has long favored Democrats

Voters waiting to cast their ballots in the 2020 U.S. presidential election in Phoenix.

PHOTO: EDGARD GARRIDO/REUTERS

By Aaron Zitner

Dec. 8, 2021 9:12 am ET

The nation's large and diverse group of Hispanic voters is showing signs of dividing its support between Democrats and Republicans more evenly than in recent elections, a new Wall Street Journal poll finds, a troubling development for the Democratic Party, which has long counted on outsized Hispanic support.

One year after giving Democratic House candidates more than 60% of their vote, according to polls at the time, the Journal survey found that Hispanic voters are evenly split in their choice for Congress. Asked which party they would back if the election were today, 37% of Hispanic voters said they would support the Republican congressional candidate and 37% said they would favor the Democrat, with 22% undecided.

Hispanic voters were also evenly divided when asked about a hypothetical rematch in 2024 of the last presidential contenders, with 44% saying they would back President Biden and 43% supporting former President Donald Trump. In 2020, Mr. Biden won 63% support among Hispanic voters, nearly 30 points more than Mr. Trump, according to AP VoteCast, a large survey of the presidential electorate.

‘Latinos are more and more becoming swing voters....They’re a swing vote that we’re going to have to fight for.’

— Democratic pollster John Anzalone

Hispanic voters account for about 1 in 8 eligible voters and are one of the fastest-growing groups in the electorate, factors that compound Democratic fears about any deterioration in support.

WSJ NEWSLETTER

Notes on the News

The news of the week in context, with Tyler Blint-Welsh.

☒ I would also like to receive updates and special offers from Dow Jones and affiliates. I can unsubscribe at any time.

☐ I agree to the Privacy Policy and Cookie Notice.

“Latinos are more and more becoming swing voters....They’re a swing vote that we’re going to have to fight for,” said Democratic pollster John Anzalone, whose company conducted The Wall Street Journal Poll along with the firm of Republican pollster Tony Fabrizio.

THE SURVEY

Read the Results

Messrs. Anzalone and Fabrizio said the poll showed that economic issues were the main concern among Hispanic voters, drawing Hispanic men, in particular, toward the GOP.

Hispanic voters in the survey ranked economic issues as the priority for Mr. Biden and Congress to address. Hispanic men said Republicans had the better economic policy, by a margin of 17 points. Hispanic women, by contrast, said Democrats had better economic plans, by a 10-point margin.

A majority of Hispanic men said they would like to return to the policies that Mr. Trump pursued as president, while a majority of Hispanic women said they would rather stick with Mr. Biden's policies.

Portrait of the Hispanic Voters

Note: Margin of error for hispanic voters of +/- 7.6 pct. pts.
Source: The Wall Street Journal Poll

“You see in this poll that there’s a group of Hispanic men who were without a doubt enticed by Trump and have become more Republican. We have more work to do on that,” said Mr. Anzalone, referring to Democratic candidates and their allies.

Mr. Fabrizio said: “This says to me that the economy matters, particularly to Hispanic men. The economy and economic factors are driving them.”

The survey is the first under a new Wall Street Journal Poll that will explore the forces driving American politics and changes in society. The firms of Messrs. Fabrizio and Anzalone will work together on surveys on the political landscape.

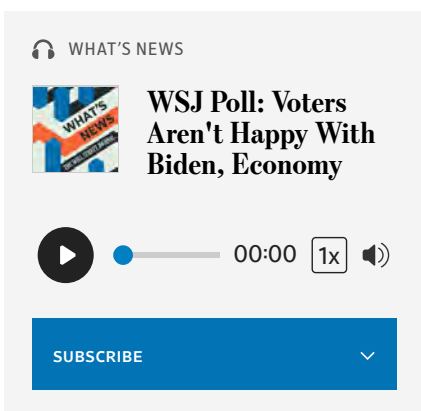

The Journal survey included 1,500 registered voters, including 165 Hispanic voters. The margin of error for the Hispanic sample was plus or minus 7.6 percentage points.

‘This says to me that the economy matters, particularly to Hispanic men. The economy and economic factors are driving them.’

— Republican pollster Tony Fabrizio

Strategists in both parties have been working since the 2020 election to calculate the size of the shift among Hispanic voters to the GOP and to understand its causes. One in-depth study, by Catalist, which compiles and analyzes voter data for Democratic candidates and progressive causes, found that Hispanic voters swung toward Mr. Trump by 8 points compared with 2016 in the two-party vote.

Shifts in some parts of the country were larger. In its analysis of the 2020 electorate, Equis Labs, which studies the Latino electorate, found swings toward the GOP of 20 points in parts of Florida’s Miami-Dade County; of 12 points in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas; and double-digit swings in parts of the Northeast. In South Florida, the shift was big enough to flip two congressional seats to the GOP, the firm concluded.

Analyses by various groups have cited a range of causes for the shift, including higher turnout among the most conservative Hispanic voters, GOP success in persuading voters who turn out infrequently and frustration over job losses due to pandemic-related business shutdowns.

In last month’s election for governor in Virginia, AP VoteCast found that Republican Glenn Youngkin, who won the race, outpolled his Democratic opponent among Hispanic voters.

In the Journal survey, Hispanic voters had a negative outlook on the economy, with 25% saying it was headed in the right direction and 63% saying it was headed in the wrong direction. That 38-point gap compared with a 31-point gap among all voters.

Hispanic voters saw Republicans in Congress as better able than Democrats to handle some economic issues, such as reining in inflation and cutting the federal deficit. They also saw Republicans as best able to secure the border.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL POLL

Half of Americans Back Biden's Vaccine-or-Test Mandate for Private Sector

Voters Pessimistic About Economy, Biden's Leadership

Inflation Emerges as a Key Concern for Voters

The Hispanic voters saw Democrats in Congress as better able to control the Covid-19 pandemic, rebuild infrastructure and make healthcare more affordable.

The results showed Hispanic voters differing little from the overall electorate in their political preferences.

Hispanic voters mirrored the overall voter pool, for example, when asked how Mr. Biden was handling his job. Some 42% approved of the president's job performance and 54% disapproved—in line with the 41% approval and 57% disapproval among the broader voting public.

POLL METHODOLOGY NOTE

The Wall Street Journal Poll was conducted by the firms ALG Research and Fabrizio, Lee & Associates, who surveyed 1,500 respondents, drawn from a list of known, registered voters, from Nov. 16-22. Half the respondents were interviewed on their cell phones. One quarter were reached by text on their cell phones and completed an internet survey. One quarter of respondents were interviewed by landline phone. The margin of error for the full sample was plus or minus 2.5 percentage points.

Write to Aaron Zitner at aaron.zitner@wsj.com

The Wall Street Journal Poll

The Journal's public opinion surveys exploring the forces driving American politics and changes in society.

COMPLETE COVERAGE

Voters Pessimistic About Economy, Biden's Leadership

Inflation Emerges as a Key Concern for Voters

Half of Americans Back Biden's Vaccine Mandate

Hispanic Voters Now Evenly Split Between Parties

Corrections & Amplifications

Among Hispanic men, 45% would support a Republican candidate for Congress and 29% would support a Democrat, a new Wall Street Journal poll found. Among Hispanic women, 46% would support a Democrat and 29% would support a Republican. On some platforms, a chart in an earlier version of this article incorrectly plotted those values. (Corrected on Dec. 8)

Appeared in the December 9, 2021, print edition as 'In Poll, Hispanic Voters Signal More Even Division of Support for Parties.'

Copyright © 2021 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. All Rights Reserved

This copy is for your personal, non-commercial use only. To order presentation-ready copies for distribution to your colleagues, clients or customers visit <https://www.djreprints.com>.