Alabama

U.S. Senate

December 11, 2017

At a campaign rally in Midland City, Kayla Moore, wife of Senate candidate Roy Moore, touted her husband's appointment of the first black marshal at the Alabama Supreme Court as proof that he supported the rights of African Americans: "Fake news would also have you think that my husband doesn't support the black community. Yet my husband appointed the very first black marshal to the Alabama Supreme Court, Mr. Willie James. When he first took office as the chief justice many years ago he brought with him three people from Etowah County. Two were black, and one of them is here tonight."

Why is this included? These comments were meant to appeal to black voters not through policies that would assist the black community, but an inference that Moore's association with a few black individuals equates to support for racial equality.

In response to allegations that Roy Moore had made anti-Semitic comments about George Soros, Moore's wife told supporters that her husband was not anti-Semitic because "One of our attorneys is a Jew. We have very close friends that are Jewish, and rabbis, and we also fellowship with them."

Why is this included? These comments were meant to appeal to Jewish voters not through policies that would assist the Jewish community, but an inference that Moore's association with a few Jewish individuals negates other evidence of anti-Semitism in a candidate's background.

Democratic candidate Doug Jones's campaign sent a mailer to black voters that stated that Roy Moore supported segregation.

Roy Moore led the fight to keep school segregation in our state Constitution.

As recently as 2004 he was fighting to keep racism the law in Alabama.

Instead of working to move Alabama forward, Moore led the campaign against removing racist, outdated language from our state Constitution that required segregation in Alabama schools.<sup>1</sup>

And Moore has ties to hate groups like the KKK.

Roy Moore has repeatedly worked alongside racists and white supremacists who support his agenda. A Mississippi KKK group supported Moore's refusal to enforce federal law;<sup>2</sup> and Moore's legal foundation accepted a thousand-dollar contribution from a Neo-Nazi group.<sup>3</sup>

Roy Moore is not on our side. Vote December 12.

Why is this included? This mailer was sent only to black voters and thus referred to “our side” in a manner intended to define “sides” by race.

The campaign for Democratic candidate Doug Jones sent a targeted mailer to black voters that depicts a black man and states, "Think if a black man went after high school girls anyone would try to make him a senator?" The front of the mailer repeated accusations that Roy Moore had molested underage girls.

Why is this included? The mailer was sent exclusively to black voters. According to a local news report, some residents who received the mailer were offended because they interpreted it as a racial appeal for their vote.

In response to false allegations by right-wing publications that Democratic donor George Soros had funded efforts to register felons to vote against Roy Moore, Moore said in an interview with American Family Radio that “Soros is certainly trying to alter the voting populous. He’s pushing an agenda. And his agenda is sexual in nature. His agenda is liberal and not what America needs. It’s not American culture. Soros comes from another world that I don’t identify with. . . No matter how much money he’s got, he’s still going to the same place that people who don’t recognize God and morality and accept his salvation are going. And that’s not a good place.”

Why is this included? Moore appears to suggest that he believes Soros will go to hell because he is Jewish, and that Soros’s Jewish faith places him outside mainstream American values. These claims borrow from common anti-Semitic narratives and appeal to white supremacists.

Highway 31, a political super PAC that supported Doug Jones, targeted ads on Facebook to black voters that stated, "A racist shouldn't represent you. If Roy Moore goes to Washington, he'll make decisions that will impact your family for years." It urged residents to vote against Moore, in favor of Jones. The ad is no longer available online.

Why is this included? The ad targeted black Facebook users and focused on Moore's alleged racist views.

Senatorial candidate Roy Moore stated during a campaign speech: "Then they started to create new rights in 1965. And today we've got a problem." 1965 was the year that the Voting Rights Act, enforcing the right to vote for Americans of all races, was enacted.

Why is this included? This statement could be a dog whistle suggesting that the enforcement of the right to vote for black Americans is creating problems today.

In an interview with Vox, Roy Moore asserted repeatedly, without evidence, that “[t]here are communities under Sharia law right now in our country.”

Why is this included? The myth that Sharia law is taking over certain American communities is false and has been spread by organizations like ACT! for America, a Southern Poverty Law Center-designated hate group, with the purpose of stoking anti-Muslim fear and sentiment.

At a campaign rally, when asked when America was last great, Roy Moore replied, “I think it was great at the time when families were united - even though we had slavery - they cared for one another . . . Our families were strong, our country had a direction.”

Why is this included? Moore’s statements used the offensive stereotype of the happy slave, which misrepresents the experience of African Americans under slavery. This type of messaging appeals to white supremacists.
