

EXHIBIT 29

BREAKING

Beloved actress Betty White dies at age 99

The Atlanta
Journal-Constitution

Log Out

Thank you for subscribing.

Choose from a variety of newsletters to stay informed.

Gwinnett commissioner calls John Lewis 'a racist pig,' faces backlash

NEWS

By Tyler Estep, The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

Jan 16, 2017

Advertisement

Gwinnett County Commissioner Tommy Hunter found himself facing calls for his resignation Monday, just two days after his social media post calling civil rights icon and U.S. Rep. John Lewis "a racist pig."

Hunter is one of the highest elected officials in one of Georgia's largest and most diverse counties.

Advertisement

The commissioner wrote the controversial Facebook post on Saturday, amid a well-publicized feud between Lewis and President-elect Donald Trump — and in the middle of a weekend set aside to honor the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., a close friend of Lewis.

Article continues below

By Bristol Myers Squibb

ADVERTISER CONTENT

Fighting Lymphoma With A Single Infusion

Lewis ignited the dispute Friday, when he said he would not be attending Trump's inauguration on Friday and said he didn't consider him "a legitimate president." Trump then responded on Twitter, calling Lewis "all talk" and proclaiming his Congressional district — which includes most of the city of Atlanta — to be "In terrible shape and falling apart."

After The Atlanta Journal-Constitution published screenshots of several of Hunter's posts on Monday, the Gwinnett Democratic Party asked the commissioner to apologize and resign.

MORE: Bernie Sanders in Atlanta: MLK would be outraged at Trump White House

MORE: Mike Pence: I am 'so disappointed' in John Lewis

MORE: Photos from Gwinnett County's 2017 MLK Day parade

Hunter was alternately conciliatory and defiant Monday. He told The AJC that his "racist pig" comment was "probably an overreaction" and eventually deleted the Facebook post in question. But he left several other potentially controversial posts up and later wished his followers a "Happy MLK Day."

“Remember it’s the content of your character, not the color of your skin that matters,” Hunter wrote. “Someday, hopefully that will become reality.”

Asked if Hunter would apologize, campaign consultant Seth Weathers said on Monday that the commissioner was “making a point about Lewis.”

Advertisement

“[Lewis’] past as a civil rights leader was great and Republicans are supportive of it,” Weathers said. “That doesn’t mean someone can make false statements and get away with it.”

“Take out Lewis’ past and deal with the here and now. What someone accomplished yesterday doesn’t make up for making false statements now. What was his comment calling Trump illegitimate based on? If a Democrat screams racist it’s a fact. But if a Republican accuses someone of doing something racist, everyone screams that the Republican is racist.”

‘A disgrace to Gwinnett’

Hunter’s colleagues on Gwinnett’s Board of Commissioners - including Chairwoman Charlotte Nash - did not respond Monday to multiple requests for comment on Hunter’s posts. Hunter and the rest of the county commissioners are scheduled to have their next meeting on Tuesday.

While they and other local GOP leaders remained silent, Democrats were happy to weigh in.

State Rep. Dar’shun Kendrick, whose District 93 touches part of Hunter’s territory in Gwinnett, shared her thoughts on Twitter, saying she was “ashamed.”

Gwinnett Democratic Party Chairman Gabe Okoye called Hunter “a disgrace to Gwinnett County in particular and Georgia in general.”

Hunter, who was first elected to his county post in 2012 and narrowly won re-election in November, represents the county’s District 3. That region covers a wide and diverse swath of southern and eastern Gwinnett, including parts of Snellville, Loganville, Grayson and Dacula.

Though much of suburban Gwinnett remains a Republican stronghold, Hillary Clinton won the county in November’s presidential election. It was the first time a Democrat took Gwinnett since Jimmy Carter in 1976.

With nearly 900,000 residents, Gwinnett is also the second-most populous county in Georgia and a majority-minority county, meaning non-white residents account for more than half of its population.

Not shy about posting

Hunter is the vice president of a local environmental testing firm and, prior to his time on the board, he worked in the county's department of public utilities and served on its water and sewage authority and its planning commission.

Hunter represents himself as a staunch conservative and has questioned county proposals for things like mass transit.

He's never been shy about posting his opinions on social media.

On Sunday, a day after the "racist pig" post, Hunter took aim at Lewis a second time, calling the longtime congressman's election wins "all illegitimate" because his district, which covers most of the city of Atlanta, is "drawn to keep him in power."

He later posted an image that included this phrase: "If you're easily offended and looking for a 'safe place' my page ain't it.. Move along snowflake."

Sometime shortly before 11 a.m. Monday, however, the "racist pig" post was no longer on Hunter's timeline. Other posts remained — including ones that mock U.S. Rep. Hank Johnson; ask if there were "any white guys" on the University of Alabama's football team; and criticize Gov. Nathan Deal's decision to declare a state of emergency ahead of last weekend's ultimately uneventful winter storm.

Hunter's page saw an influx of nasty comments Monday, many of which called the commissioner disparaging names or urged him to "stay classy."

Donna McLeod, a Democrat who narrowly lost her bid last year for Ga. House District 105, which is partially in Hunter's district, said she wasn't surprised by Hunter's comments.

"This is the kind of campaign that the president-elect ran," said McLeod, who was attending Gwinnett's MLK parade Monday.

Not all of the feedback on Hunter's comments was negative, though. Many comments on Hunter's Facebook page expressed support. And Jasmine Smith, a black woman who described herself as a personal friend of Hunter's, posted on his Facebook page to call him "a fantastic man with an exceptional heart."

"So what if he openly put his view on [Facebook]," Smith wrote. "We all do a little too much of that. So if expressing yourself on [Facebook] is now wrong we all need to get off."

—Staff writers Lauren Foreman and Greg Bluestein contributed to this article.

About the Author

Tyler Estep

Tyler Estep is a reporter covering DeKalb County, its government and its people. A Gwinnett County native and University of Georgia graduate, he has been with the AJC since 2015. He previously covered his home county and served stints on the paper's hyperlocal and breaking news teams.

Editors' Picks

10h ago

Beloved actress Betty White dies at age 99

1h ago

Atlanta records 158th homicide of 2021, passing 2020's total

57m ago

Atlanta HBCUs pivot to virtual learning due to COVID-19

2h ago

Atlanta HBCUs pivot to virtual learning due to COVID-19

2h ago

Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms: 'We are leaving this city intact'

9h ago

The Latest

Atlanta records 158th homicide of 2021, passing 2020's total

57m ago

Betty White spent some happy moments in Atlanta

1h ago

Atlanta police investigate fatal shooting near Bethel Drive

4h ago

Investigations

Georgia gets first shipments of Merck, Pfizer COVID pills
22h ago

Last-minute change of plans leads to life-saving rescue in Georgia
18h ago

Inside the campaign to undermine Georgia's election

CONTENT BY

Cuteness | Sponsored

The 60 Most Hilarious Cat Memes of All Time

Facts Therapy | Sponsored

The 4 Sister's Took Photo Every Year For 40 Years, You Won't Believe What Happened To Them

NowThis | Sponsored

Tom Hanks Movies Ranked From Worst to First

HighlyHealthy | Sponsored

5-Year-Old Calls 911 To Save Dad's Life But Her Call Is Cracking Everyone Up

Stacker | Sponsored

Ranking the 50 Best Netflix Series So Far

The Atlanta
Journal-Constitution

ABOUT

- Help Center
- About the Atlanta Journal-Constitution
- Newsroom Ethics Code
- Careers
- Archive
- Press On

CONTACT US

- Contact Us
- Send a News Tip
- Advertise
- AJC Newsroom

OUR PRODUCTS

ePaper
Newsletters
All AJC Podcasts
Download iOS App
Download Android App

SUBSCRIPTION

Print Subscription
Digital Subscription
Manage Subscription
Your Profile
NIE/Newspapers in Education

© 2021 The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.
All Rights Reserved.

By using this website, you accept the terms of our Visitor Agreement and Privacy Policy, and understand your options regarding Ad Choices.

Learn about Careers at Cox Enterprises.

Back to Top